Civil servants in pay fight refuse to obey government orders

From Paul Routledge Labour Correspondent Douglas, IoM

Civil servants bave taken the unprecedented step of refusing unprecedented step of refusing to carry out government orders in their fight for extra pay for implementing higher pensions.

In offices of the Department of Health and Social Security all over the country, members of the Civil and Public Services Association are countermodding Association are countermanding ministerial instructions to send out pension books bearing new rates payable from July 22.

They are sending out books with the old figures on them and have baoded back work schedules to their supervisors. Tha union's defiance of Civil Service tradition that government orders, however onerous or odious, are carried out strikes at but was not prepared to say that be would not support those who fired on British troops. Frankly we have not the faintest desire to stay in Ireland, and the quicker we are out the better.

However, when I speak to any of the political leaders in the South, be it Mr Lynch, Mr Cosgrave, Brendan Corish, and others, they all say that if British troops were

Mr Roy Mason's first signifi-cant pronouncements in the Commons yesterday as Secretary of State for Defence will bave giveo little joy to those in the Labour raoks who stand by last year's conference resolution calling for defence cuts of £1,000m. Indeed, the impression given-ing Mr. Mason was that the about left aragoing to be lucky f they get even the "several-undered million pounds" of nts meotioned in the election

It would also seem that the Secretary of State is not going to be any pushover for those MPs in his party, and others outside, who are calling for cancellation of contracts with hlacklisted pations, the abandonment of the multi-role combat aircraft (MRCA) or the closure of Amarican Polaris bases. While Labour MPs sat glumly through most of Mr Mason's speech there was a continual rumble of approval from the Conservative benches for a realistic assessment of our defence role and oceds thatwould not have come amiss from Lord Carrington himself.

The Secretary of State began by telling the Honse that he had no intention of making enor-mous unilateral cuts and be did oot think that these would take place. The Government had always said that there would be discussions with all coocerned withio and outside this country, and that Britain would not go ahead unilaterally.

There were loud cheers from the Tory benches as Mr. Mason went on to say that as far as the frigates for Chile and the spares were concerned these had been were concerned these had been agreed and they were going ahead. As for the MRCA and Polaris these would form part of the defence review and would be discussed with those con-

Mr Masoo said the defence review, which would be the most comprehensive examina-tion of Britaio's future defence rola and commitments ever mounted in peacetime, would be presented to a White Paper in the autumn.

But he said that several bundred million pounds should be saved on the defence budget as a result of this review. A propresent year would be found by delaying orders but it would almost certainly be necessary to impose some cancellations of equipment.
While Mr Mason told the Hoose that he did not wish to be alarmist, he painted a worrying picture of the way in which Soviet forces round the world were catching up and overtak-ing the West.

A falling off in Nato's relative military strength and determination to fight, said Mr Mason, could well result in a decline in political self-confi-dente and cohesion. Nato must be the lynchpin of Britain's security and a Labour govern-ment's commitment to the alliance, was unequivocal.

Mr Mason said that the armed hir Mason sain that the armen forces pay review report would be given to the Prime Minister this week and he boped that a statement could also he made this week. The new rates of pay would be backdated to April I. Almost as soon as Mr Masoo bad ended bis speech there were rumblings of discootent from the Labour left. Mr Frank Allaun said solidarity was the one word that the British Labour move-ment understood. The best way of expressing that was to declar that there should be no arms for Chile, particularly Hawker Hunters, the aircraft which had bombed the president's palace in Saotiago.

The new Triumph 2500 TC.

Our new 2500 TC has a pretty impressive pedigree to live up to. So we've made sure that it does — with traditional Triumph style and dash.

The result is a roomy five-seater, that has neither forgotten its sporty family background, nor the present price of petrol.

Even when driven hard, the smooth six-cylinder engine with its finely tuned SUs, quietly delivers more mpg than you could rightly expect from a 2½-litre.

It can top 100 mph, achieve 0-50 in 8-5 seconds, yet return around 33 mpg at a steady 50.

Inside, we've paid a lot of attention to comfort and safety.

A comfortable driver is a safer driver. In the new 2500 TC the big comfortable seats come in a choice of corded Bri-Nylon or 'breathing' vinyl. Front seats are reclining — with optional head-rests — and fitted inertia-reel belts. There are also three rear seat-belt anchorages.

A seat belt warning light is fitted for the first time on a British production saloon. Also standard, are hazard warning lights. Anti-burst door locks – child proof on the rear doors.

A heated rear window. Dipping rear-view mirror, with break-away support. Padded facia surround, parcel shelf, and sun visors.

And on the outside, a driver's door rear-view mirror.

The Triumph 2000 and 2.5 models, incidentally, have been up-dated too, and the 1974 versions include the main features of the new 2500 TC. So now there's a full range of six-cylinder models to suit all tastes.

When you see – and try – the new Triumph 2500 TC, you'll be comparing it with cars in the luxury continental price bracket.

In fact, the 2500 TC is better value.

That's the wonderful thing about

'Social contract' not binding on us, civil servants' union says

From Paul Routledge Douglas, Isle of Man

Limitations of the "social contract" on pay between the Government and the unions were clearly shown at the anoual conference of the Civil and Public Sarvices Association here yesterday. At best, it will do no mora than "condition" Civil Service pay demands, and industrial ection will still be used agaioat wage curbs.

Mr William Keodall, the Association's geoeral secretary, made plain that whatever its terms the compact between the TUC and Mr Wilson's Administratioo will not be contractually bioding on the biggest aod most militant union in tha Civil

Addressing the opening ses-Addressing the opening session of the conferance, he defined "social contract" as "the creation of a framework and ao atmosphere io which major economic and social issues can ha discussed and agraements or understandings reached after taking into account the needs and views of those immediately affected". He added: "I do not think it is any more than that." think it is any more than that."

After examining the Govern-meet's record to date, Mr Kendall said the next immediate aim must be the abolition of the eocalled counter-inflation policy.
"Union demands can be conditioned, and no more than condi-tioned, if the Govarnment are seen to be tackling successfully the causes and pressures which lead in the demand for ever higher wage increases.

"But if I say that the start which the present government bas made affords us more room for hope theo anything in the performance of their predecessors, I must also amphasize that we cannot simply rely upon the benevolence of any government, however well disposed."

Civil sarvants were still suf-fering from the inflexibilities of incomes policy, pay anomalies, pay relativities, allowances, London weighting, shorter working hours and bettar holidays. Social contract Department of Health end Social Security and in the Land Registry. "I can see immediate trouble ahead in other areas".

he said.
"And in the end, whatever the terms of a contract between the TUC and the Government. we have to say to ourselves as paid and alected officials, the only bioding contractual obliga-tion is that batween oursalves and the mambers of the association. The nature of this coo-tract is not speculative. It is in the clearest possible terms in our rules and constitution.

"The return of a Labour government, the good measures it has implemented so far, hava oot in any fundamental fashion altered the nature of the society io which we live. The hasic conflicts still remain. We shall need to use wheever shall need to use whatever strength we have to defeat wage curbs and improve living

Delegates to the conference passed by a substantial majority a censure motion on their full-time national officials on full-time national officials on "inefficiency and ineptitude" in negotiating the terms of the f45m accomplies award gracted to civil servants by the Pay Board in putting right injustices created by the stantory incomes policy. The censure is correspected to precipitate changes in the union leadership, although inevitably it produced dismay.

The conference went on to

The conference went on to reject proposals to withdraw tha union from the traditional pay research unit method of determining wage increases for white collar civil servants, hesed on comparisons with similar workers in outside indus-

In his presidential address,
Mr Leo Laver said that last year's strike in the Civil Service, the first in its history, was successful in achieving its ob-jactives. Mr Hayward lists pride in 10 weeks of Labour

By Our Political Staff The "social contract" on which so much of the Government's policy depends is not an edict handed down from on high and noder duress. Not is it confined within statutory limits and with statutory policies. In saying thet yesterday, Mr Hayward, general secretary of the Labour Party, explained that, fat from being "a plece of paper", the social contract was e "living and developing relationship covering the whole range of our social and economic policies ".

Speaking at the annual council meeting of tha General Federation of Trade Unions at Weston-super-Mare, Mr Hay-ward said the social contract was the result of a programme bammered ont inside the Labour movement first in tha agreement of July, 1972, and later in the agreement of Fabruary, 1973, antitlad: Economic policy and the cost of living.

"When you think that it is only 10 short weeks since the Labour Government came to office, I helieve we can proudly proclaim that our achievement has been spectacular. First, we said we would give priority to the least privileged and the least protected members of our society, those who bava suf-fered most from inflation, the pensioners. This we bave done.

"Second, we said we would introduce an effective system of price controls on tha key items of the household budget, spe-cially on foods. This we bave

"Thirdly, on bousing and land, as soon as work is com-plete on the legislation to nationaliza all development land, it will be introduced and anacted. We have stopped the rise in mortgage interest ratas and we hope sooo to teduce them from their present intolerabla levels.

"Wa bave in fact done rather more than wa ptomised in the social contract of 15 months ago."

"It is our intention to encourage good occupational pension schemes, and that is the message that I want to go out from the Government this afternoon. I hope that Industry will take account of it."

The Right Hon. BARBARA CASTLE, M.P. Secretary of State for Social Services.
House of Commons, Tuesday 7 May, 1974

In other words, Company Pensions are as important as ever.

In a statement in the House of Commons on 7 May, 1974—regarding the future of the Social Security Act 1973—Mrs. Barbara Castle announced the cancellation of the State Reserve Scheme, and with it, the recognition requirements for occupational pension schemes due to come into force in April 1975.

She made it quite plain that it was her wish to "encourage the development of good occupational pension schemes, which are highly valued by the people in them."

Although the compulsion may have gone, the need for occupational pension schemes remains.

The need for the financial security in retirement which a good scheme can give; for life assurance cover which your employees' dependants need; and the flexibility which no State scheme can provide.

So the message is plain to everyone concerned with occupational pensions. Carry on the good work you are doing. Accelerate the action you are taking. And if you haven't taken action yet don't delay. Because, as Mrs. Castle said, "the setting up of any good new occupational pension scheme, or the improvement of an existing one, represents a move in the right direction".

The compulsion's gone but the need remains.

Protest strike in Denmark over tax proposals

From Our Correspondent Copenhagen, May 13 A quarter of Denmark's industrial labour force went on unofficial strike today to support labour movement protests against the consumer and income tax proposals presented by the five-month-old Liberal minority Government last week.

The 40,000 strikers ignored the appeals of union officials to go to work, and about 10,000 gathered in front of the Danish Parliament building for a rally where speakers and banner slo-gans called upon the Government to resign.

During the day, members of the Government communed negotiations with the Opposition in an effort to reach a compromise that will allow the smooth passage of their plans through the Folketting tomor-

A message to all Legal & General pensions policyholders who have improved or are improving their pension schemes:

Well done!

The advice you have taken is right, and this view is shared by Mrs. Barbara Castle, who in her statement in the House of Commons on 7 May, 1974 said, "The setting up of any good new occupational pension scheme, or the improvement of an existing one, represents a move in the right direction".

Although the provisions of the Social Security Act 1973 relating to the State Reserve Scheme and the recognition requirements for occupational pension schemes will not now come into force in April 1975, the need for good occupational pension schemes remains.

Mrs. Castle recognises that employees need good pensions more than ever with today's inflation. Good occupational pension schemes provide them. Your employees' needs don't change, even if the Social Security Act 1973 does.

Legal and General's modern contracts have the flexibility likely to meet any future requirements, and are backed by efficient administration and unrivalled technical expertise.

If you don't already have a good occupational scheme, Legal and General can help you. After all, we already help

Tension rises on Pakistan border with Afghanistan

Rawalpindi, May 13

Despite official suggestions for talks to resolve their differences in the capitals of Pakistan and Afgitanistan, Mr Abdul Qayyum Khan, Pakistan'a Home Minister, has continued to make state-ments from Khyber in the North West Frontier Province to Kalat in Baluchistan, which tend to bold the Kahul regime respon-sible for subversion in Pakistan's two northern provinces.

Delhi talks see former war allies at odds

From Michael Hornsby Delhi, May 13

Increasing political and economic differences, which have source Delhi-Dacca relations since the heady days of the joint victory at arms over Pakistan in 1971, have cast a shadow over the summit talks which began here yesterday between Shaikh Mujibur Rahman and Mrs Indira Gandhi, the Prime Minis ters of Bangladesh and India.

The public communiques will doubtless be devoted largely to prorestations of undying friendship, but there is likely to be some tough bar-gaining behind the closed doors gaining behind the closed doors of the conference chamber. That Bangladesh means busi-ness is clear from the composi-tion of its large delegation, which includes several senior economic planners.

One of the issues understood to he preoccupying Bangladesh the most at the moment is India's controversial Farakka India'a controversial Farakka Barrag barrage project which is now within a few months of completion. This E80m scheme was a cause of acute friction between India and Pakistan before 1971 and is still explosive.

When in operation, the barrage, which has been built across the Ganges at Farakka

only a few miles upstream from the Bangladesh border, will divert during the dry season (mid-March to mid-June) a sub-stantial volume of water from the Ganges into the heavily silted river system of the Indian state of West Bengal, mainly with the aim of improving the navigability of Calcutta

The key issue is precisely how large the volume of diverted water should be. The West Bengal government has urged the windrawal of as much as 40,000 cubic feet per second of water at a time of the year when the total flow of the Ganges is seldom more than 80,000 and sometimes falls, as

Bangladesh believes that a withdrawal on this scale would rave a devastating impact on its rural economy, and many independent agencies, including the World Bank, tend to support this view. Surface water irrigation along the Ganges in Rangladesh could be severely reduced and the intrusion of salt water up the Ganges delta could damage land.

One proposal that may he discussed is that India, by way of compensation, should help to finance the development of un-finance the development of underground reserves of water in Bangladesh.

Sbaikh Mnjib and Mrs Gandhi will also be reviewing the unhappy economic relations hetween their two countries.
Much as India may wish to help Bangladesh, the fact is that their economies are essentially competitive. Certainly, India has been no substitute for the protected markets Dacca formerly enjoyed in West Pakistan.

At what atage, though, do journalists reveal an interest? I ask hecause political breast-beating on the subject has awakened me to the fact that over tha past few months a hail of fashion books has landed on my desk almost burying a letter which contains the seeds of dalliance with a publisher. Readara of this newspaper bave heen made familiar through Mr Levin of the strange languor which steals over the columnist when the moment arrives actu-ally to write something. No mat-ter how imperative the thought, how indignant the urge, how thrusting the creative impulse, there is always another fifteen minutes hefore you really heve to start work. Mr Levin eats his-cuits. I hrush my hair, But this insidious languor is converted in my case to a positive torpor when confronted with the amount of research, noting, dates, and grinding detail im-plicit in a quality work of refer-ence. Astute publishers should, therefore, send me lots more fashion hooks, for there is a good chance I may be too enervated to write anything myself.

High on the torpor-inducing list comes Elizabeth Ewing's History of Twentieth Century Fashion (Batsford, £4). For two hundred and fifty two pages, the industrious Miss Ewing shuttles back and forth across the whole warp of fashion's loom-covering shops and sweat-shops, cost prices for Chinese silk hlouses, Poiret, Berketex, Cecil Beaton, Fhe New Look—building up her threads into a cloth as tightly woven and as enduring as a Yorkshire worsted. Alas, the texture is as dull, and the individual. threads as hard to locate. While this book contains an enormous amount of information, it is so dispersed throughout chapter after chapter that it loses its clour. The pictures are ill-chosen

sources, and fortunately the creditable motives assigned to their silence cover both those who are genuinely brave and those for whom it is less a casa of not revealing them than having mislaid them. Mind you I relying on charm, repetitive, and not furthering the text as pictures should. They look, particularly at the end of the book when Miss Ewing seema on know whereabouts my sources tenuous ground anyway, suspi-ciously like hand-out publicity photos. And should so much space he devoted to Balmain, should the Poiret cliches, really be repeated, does Italy have no place in twentieth-contury are—three lines from the hor-tom, left hand page, five sixths of the way through a hook with a blue cover. Just which book place in twentieth-century fashion? But if you want to know that in 1967 the age group 15-19 bought 48 per cent of all coats, 60 per cent of all dresses, 42 per cent of knitwear and 48 per cent of skirts; if you want know about the mass market English ready-to-wear firms and the Cotton Board; if you be-lieve that designers are the causes of change not the symp-toms of that change, this book highly recommended. The other reason why authors need not fear thia specialist is that like, I suspect, most specialists I find my subject everywhere and in every sort of book anyway. Perhaps if I were the angling correspondent things might be different, not every vista contains a stream, not every passionate novel a trout. But clothes and design are an intrinsic part of life. I read The Go-Between at Easter and I now know what was and what was not proper bicycling costume for a young lady at the turn of the century. Peter Nichols's book Italia, Italia explains and amplifies everything I have felt and tried to express when reporting the Italian collactions. I discovered the explaint of the state of the sta the only satisfactory adjective for Jean Muir, allotropic, when reading Temporary Kings, by Anthony Powell.

The Young Visiters is a mine of sartorial information; Sir Channon's diaries review prewar Royal maternity wear most succinctly; Kare Millett's Sexual Politics provided that analogy of the lily and the rose which I like so much for fashion. The Coverley Papers is full of advice on what to wear, how behindhand the country is compared with Town, and how sensible it would be to be painted or sculpted in a toga or classical armour (like King James outside the National Gallery) in order that your likeness should not be dated by your clothes.

The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, which I read in paperback on the same principle as they paint the Forth Bridge, yields the secret of the theft of silk from China, in great detail, and it also contains a quotation which should be written in letters a metre high outside every French pret-a-porter show, "In every aga the absence of genuine inspiration is supplied by tha strong illusions of enthusiasm and the mimic arts of imposture." Many books when turned into films are used current example being, of course, The Great Gatsby. Perhaps because it is the film which has imposed the fashion angle. which was never there to my recollection in the book. I find the whole thing hogus in this instance and am sure the only effect ir will have will he to encourage even more women to wear the sort of silly, inappropriate hats, as did the young lady who presented the prizes at the Grand National and whose ill-anchored headgear was knocked off by horse and man

One of the most useful cribs for spontaneous literary fashion references is a hook called Dress, Art and Society by Geoffrey Squire (Studio Vista, £6.50). Indeed you might say that the generous annotation of aources was the book's strongest point, for it contains to my mind, amazing assumptions and conclusions. However, tha reminder that in Waugh's Vile Bodies Misa Runcible was asked to leave the hotel dining room for wearing trousers (1930) is something. I can also forgive a lot for the deadpan revelation that cod-pieces were padded and "served many arhitrary purposes...a convenient pocket for small articles (sic) and as a pincushion". I have always understood sitting on Henry VIII's knee was dangerous, but how much more than I knew how much more than I knew. Then, of course, there is Commitmen. This book and its suthor have had so much writ-ten m them that you may sigh to see the name mentioned again. There are, however, constant referencea in it to clothes, and anyone interested in the worth studying. I find the preoccupation with akirts in an age of largely androgynous fashion intriguing. Discussing the merits of being of either sex with small speci mens of each the other day, the argument that it was nicer to be a hoy because they could "do more things" came full circle to the recognition that in fact girls had a plus in that they could wear trousers or skirts.

As a matter of fact, my interest in Miss Morris is on a mundane level. I know she is five foot nine and weighs 133lb, and that her shoes make her feet look more delicate than they are, but what I yearn to know is what size are her feet, what size is she, is she going to have the ghastly shopping problems of the non-stock size? Where does she indulge her "passion for trying on clothes", what sort of "extravagances" must she avoid in dress?

It would be nice to think that she was teetering on the brink of Bill Gibb, going about her business immaculate in divinely cut beiga gabardine. But, adding up the taste close in the book, I suspect that the extravagance might in fact be pea-cock satin with beaded cuffs; that the lady may ba less St Laurent than Cresta.

of State was not going to argue that because the Conservatives made some cuts the Government were entitled to make some more. That would be twisted logic. Where was the axe going to fall?

The number of Soviet ships in the Indian Ocean had multiplied in the last few years. It would be maybe to allow that ocean to become a Soviet lake. Some money could be saved on research and development by cancelling equipment and buying American, but that would cause memployment.

Intentifiede

It was hard to imagine greater folly or political ineptitude than for the Secretary of State and the Government to announce enormous undasteral cuts at this time. By so doing, they would remove the incentive for the Russians to reduce their forces and make nousense of their manifesto in which they said they regarded Nato as a system of determe as much as of defence. The truth was that the Secretary of State could not get his cuts of desence.

The truth was that the Secretary of State could not get his curs from curside Nato, from cancelling Boidsh equipment or by closing Devemport. Portsmouth and Chatham dockyards. He could only get those cars by crippling Britain's forces. That would reduce the country to a sort of Finland of western Europe and that was why he was refusing to publish a White Paper until the automa.

The Secretary of State knew that the choice was one of either crippling the forces and "Finlandiang" Britain, which would go with the current "Scandinavianization" that was going on, or he ditched his manifesto and had a crippling row with his left wing. That was refusing to come clean.

MR MASON, Secretary of State for Defence (Barusley, Lab), said the Government had no insention of making enormous unilsaeral cuts and he did not think they would take place. The Government committee that always indicated there would be discussions with all those concerned. The defence review should be completed by the autumn and cerned. The defence review strong and the results would be presented in a White Paper. The review would be the most comprehensive examination of Britain's future defence role and her commitments, mounted in percentage of SDBH.

The additional savings of £50m the Government had decided to make had resulted in total savings for the financial year 1974-75 of £300m at 1973 prices and, £346m expressed in 1974 prices. From the figures it looked as though defence was regarded by the last Government as a prime candidate for expenditure curs, and also on Government as a prime canadace for expenditure cuts, and also on a rapidly rising scale.

The defence estimates for 1974-75 which had already been amounced and totalled £3,612cm reflected all the savings ha had magnifered.

Isograes.)
It was no easily to be precise about how savings could be achieved. A proportion would be taken up in slippage and on top of that, it would almost certainly be necessary to impose some cancella-tions to impose the full savings target for 1974-75.

In the short-term, commitments could not be readily adjusted and the bill for the pay of the anned forces and defence civilians which in 1973 amounted to about 47 per in 1973 amounted to about 47 per cent of the total estimates, was a fixed element in the budget.

The result was that the brunt of the short-term cus most fall on the equipment wote, ships, aircraft, tanks and other weapons and equipment used by the Sarvices, in this area, too, short-term measures would have the most damaging and discupuive effect.

It is my intention (he said) that the defence review I have inisisted should not suffer from this piecemed approach.

The engineers overhauling the Rolls-Royce engines were blacking that work, to their great credit. They were prepared to sacrifice employment because of the principle involved. Sometimes principles came before profits and this was such an occasion. The export of arms was one sort of export they did not want. For the good name of Labour Hawker Hunters should not go to Chile.

MR WALL (Haltemprice, C) said the Conservative Government set an example in Nato by slightly increasing defence expenditure and encouraging their partners to live up to it. Savings could be made within Nato. There was still a long way to go in the standardization of arms.

mr. MR MALLALIEU (Buddersfield, East, Lab) and the Government should first try to make a realistic assessment of the threat, or threats, against which they had to guard, and the degree of immediacy of the threats. They must also make an assessment of the extent to which reliance could be placed on the efficient cooperation of allies.

The largest single item of expenditure on defence was on manpower and the Government should try to save on that. They should cut down on recruitment

MR CARSON (Belfast, North, UUUC), in a maiden speech, said the people of Ulster were deeply grateful to the Army and the patience, good humour and the personal kindness from all ranks, but the policy of containment, rather than commonstation and attack, which the Army had been required to adopt had long proved ineffective. ineffective.

MR JACKSON (Brighouse and Spenborough, Lab) said ir would be a bad moment for any reduction of British forces in Gibraltar. The Suez Canal was to be opened again and it was imperative there should be one area of defence stability at the entry to the Mediterranean that everyone could rely on.

MR ALAN CLARK (Plymouth, Surron, C) said there was not one single Royal Nervy sirip effort which had a surface-to-surface capability whereas the Russiens had over 150 fast patrol boats all equipped with surface-to-surface missiles. The Secretary of State should clear up rumours be had heard that the possibility of plusing out the Royal Marines was being considered.

MR CONLANY (Gereshead, East, Lab) said it was difficult to switch factories over from making arms although the theory might be nice. They could not just change over at EAC, for example, from making military secrate to making washing machines. It was not a simple theoretical task. It was a question of bruial reality.

Bill to require registration of farriers

The Clericel, Medical and Gen-eral Life Assurance Bill and the National Insurance Bill passed their remaining stages. LORD NEWALL moved the second reading of the Farriers Registration Bill to prevent unqualified people from shocing houses, to increase the number of farriers by training and to establish a Farriers Registration Council.

He said farriers were in great demand and untrained and igno-rant people clashed in the offering their services to unsuspecting owners and then disappearing. This often led to lame borses which offer could not be used main for some weeks. The littinger of horses, ponies, donkeys and mailes in fiss couldry was estimated at just their 500,000 though The Sunitay Times had put the figure at a million. Numbers were growing, too. There were 1,600 farriers in the United to Sunitay are such original to the sunitay to the sunitary such original to the sunitary such original to such the sunitary so each original to such the sunitary such that the sunitary kingdom, so each one luad to shoe about 1,200 feet. Peirclers suppurted the Bill. So did other organizations connected with horses, findluding the Royal Col-

rege of veterinary Surgeons, the British Horse Society, the Jockey Club and the RSPCA. Club and the RSPCA.

VISCOUNT THURSO (L) said the Bill did not deal with the special needs of remote areas. A dottion provision was that allowing people to the their own horses. He would not presume to do this without training and an examination.

(Lab) said the British Horse Society and the BSJA should supu-late that in competitions the ground on the landing side of jumps should be ploughed to save horses from hard ground on limpact.

LORD HELSBY said farrier apprentices trained for four years and needed to be assured flat people with little or no knowledge or skill would not be allowed to earn a better living at the 'ob. The EARL of MALMESEURY (C) said some families who owned houses frequently did not realize the care which must be taken of the animal's feet.

LORD LEATHERLAND (Lab) said many bisclessofths had taken to intricating iros ornaments or farnishings and one in his county had even become engaged in making chasticy belts. (Laughter.) in fairness to British womanhood, this was largely an export trade. (Further laughter.) LORD WELLS-PESTELL, Lord in Walting, said that the Govern-ment found Lord Newall's objectives broadly acceptable but were not altogether persuaded that a Bill was macessary to achieve them. If suffering was being caused to houses by incompetent farriery, those responsible could under existing law be brought before the courts and punished.

Commission directive on drinking water European Parliament 🕆

SIGNOR AUGUSTO PREMOLI (Italy, L) moved a resolution on behalf of the Committee on Public Health and Environment endorsing a Commission directive on drinking water.

He said that the demand for water was constantly growing and in urben areas was running at about 500 litres per day per person for private, santation and industrial use. In Europe generally and in the Community specifically there was dire need to bring water resources policy up-to-date. Desalinization was expensive so they had to search for less expensive methods of obtaining fresh water.

New plays at the National The sculptor as film-maker Theatre

Mr Peter Hall, director of the National Theatre, yesterday announced the company's productions for the next nine months.

Wedekind's Spring Awakening. May 28, will be followed on July 9 by The Marriage of Figuro, by Beaumarchais, directed by Jonathan Miller. August will bring a production of Peter Shaffer's Equus (director John Dexter) and Octoher Peter Nichols's new comedy The

The Jew of Mulhaus, the first play by A. E. Ellis, with Paul Rogers, is due in December, and Etherege's She Would If She Could in January. Ibsen's John Gabriel Borkman, with Peggy Ashcroft and Ralph Richardson is promised for February, and Shaw's Heartbreak House, with Colin Blakely and Paul Rogers for March.

important contributions to the experimental cinema were made by artists: Léger, Duchamp, Man Ray, Picabia, Eggeling, Richter. The coming of the talkies with its powerful technical pressures towards realism and filmed drama virtually killed the experimental film for a generation. Gradually, after the Second World War, experiment began again, particularly in America. Once more many of those involved were artists. (Warbol is the best known.) In England a number of experimental films have been made at the London Film Co-op, due largely to the initiative of Malcolm Legrice, a Slade-trained painter. But these images are halanced by structural devices which keep reminding one that this is film and of the processes that making a film impolate that "the with at 24

the film suggests, with a much greater stress on the dimension of time. Where in Vertical Hall used various physical devices to examine the nature of space and distance, in Timecheck he uses film devices like time-lapse photograpby (a single frame exposed every two to five seconds instead of 24 times a second) or fast motion to com-press time. The relationship tween time and distance is explored at length and in many diferent ways (sometimes almost too complicatedly). The landscape is seen from ground level, from the top of mountains, from a light aeroplane flying through the clouds, so that the coloured counties are glimpsed through the cumuli, from a high-flying airliner where only the cloud ceiling below is visible, and from a satellite (in material doped from a NASA film) where the earth is seen as a turning sphere shrouded in tatters of cloud,

Some of the images in Time-check are of great romantic beauty and sombreness. Speeded involve, that "tha truth at 24 frames per second" is something that can be inexhaustibly mani pulated. The film finishes with a sound loop from the NASA film of an astronaut's voice repeating "I think we're going into darkness now." and after a short while the film ends going, literally, into darkness.

Both Vertical and Timecheck are uneven, stuffed with more ideas than can be dealt with in relatively short films. Sometimes they are repetitive and confusing but they are rich in confusing, but they are rich in texture and offer something new at each viewing. In the most recent films, made in collaboration, Hall and Sinden concentrate on single ideas in death

7 TV Pieces are the seven three-minute films that Hall wishes to preserve from 10 commissioned by the Scottish Arts Council for the 1971 Edinhurgh Festival. Scottish Telestics vision were persuaded to insert one of these each day between np clouds boiling over a stormy normal programmes without landscape, a shadow moving comment or announcement inexorably across a piece of Seen on the cinema screen, one has to imagine their effect in this quite different cootext. Sometimes Hall uses surrealist images, reminiscent of Magritte, like an old television set burning in the middle of a land-scape. In one of the simplest and best, a tap is lowered and and best, a tap is lowered and the whole screen fills up gradually with water like a glass goddfish howl, then is drained ont. Another condenses a whole evening's TV seen in a college TV room while the sound-track is three minutes of "real time" on the sound track.

Sinden assisted Hall on the TV pieces, and in Five Films, made, like Vertical, with an Arts Council grant, they worked together. There is an increasing concern with the nature and process of film as a medium. But unlike much experimental, so-called "structuralist" cinema, this is not explored tediously and academically. The nature and academically. The harvre of the film process, light projected on a flat surface, is contrasted with the powerful illusion of realism which it creates. This is most clearly demonstrated in This Surface. the first sequence is shot in a Brixton puh at Christmas time. A middle-aged man dances in the bar balancing a pint of beer on his head surroundad by a laughing, clapping audience. The buman warmth and vitality is a decribed by the company of the buman warmth and vitality is a decribed by the company of the buman warmth and vitality is a decribed by the company of the buman warmth and vitality is a decribed by the company of the company The buman warmth and vitality is so dominant that one is completely "drawn into" the scene, oblivious of the film process. The second sequence is a series of travelling shots along a deserted sea-front filmed with a live of the second sequence. desertad sea-front filmed with a slide of clear glass before the lens on which is scrawled in red a writtan definition of the physical nature of the film as projected light on a flat surface. The words go in and out of focus, so that now one sees them, now tha filmed hack-

In View colour is imperceptibly introduced into a black-andwhite take of a room with a window giving on to a street. Between, the most formal of the films, is a repeated sequence of a cameraman filming the screen and the projector in a viewing theaire, made by duping each print from the last so that the quality gradually deteriorates and the recognizable image is slowly reduced to an abstract pattern of flickering light.

It is a pity that the Tate authorities haveo't put on view the sculptures by Hall in its collection to complement the films. But one hopes that they will continue this experiment of short daytime seasons (and one-off evening shows) of films by

Lucia Popp Queen Elizabeth Hall

Alan Blyth

Lucia Popp proved herself as much master of the recital platform as she is of the stage in her much applauded London song dehut on Sunday. She cleverly chose a programme that never took her outside the range of her fresb, bright, slightly monochromatic voice, and she dispensed it with such intelligence and charm as to maka us forget any tonal restrictions. Besides, there was her palpitating presence to enhance the purely vocal joys.

Her style is based on excellent musical manners represented by an unwavering line and a crisp articulation of words. Caccini's "Amarilli" tested the first attribute to the limit. It did not find Miss Popp wanting, but there was more to it than that, an immediate affinity with its tender, heartfelt sentiments. So it was throughout, feeling and mood matched to the technical assurance.

While there was much to admira in her Schuhert and Strauss, particularly in the former's rarely encountered "Die Rose" (an allegory of strong passions spent if ever I heard one) it was her Wolf that was most remarkable "Die was most remarkable. "Die Sprode" and "Die Bekehrte", a masterly pair of Goethe set-tings, and the ideal wistful heauty, and "Wie glantz der helle Mond", that inoocent vision of heaven in Keller's words, was done in just the right clear, serene manner. As one would expect from today's leadwould expect from today's lead-ing Despina and Zerlina, the whimsical fun of "Der Schäfer" and "Elfenlied" was keenly pointed. And the generous encores included the same com-poser's delicious "Auch kleine Dinge", delightfully sweet and unmannered.

In Smetana's Eventida cycle. the timbra and language were entirely idiomatic, as one would expect from a compatriot of the composer. All the compassion and longing of those wonderful songs were reflected in the interpretation. Georg Fischer, the singer's husband, was a considerate, careful but not very individual partner.

Keith Michell

The new man at Chichester

Twelva years ago, in the first play ever staged at the Chiches-ter Festival Theatre, John Fletcher's The Chances, Keith Michell's performance stood out because of its comic panache and inexhaustible verve. "The energy I think came from the stimulus of having the audience so close and around me like that. Again with Hamlet at the Bankside Globe the year before last, it took my breath away sometimes—it was so exciting doing those solilogmes when suddenly you could see their eyes and their faces, and you were sharing your thoughts with them. And Peter Coe even had me going down into the andi-torium and talking to them." He has alwaye enjoyed working with Peter Coe, who is now rehearsing Pirandello's Tonight We Improvise, which opens Michell's first season as Artistic Director at Chichester to-morrow. "Tha first time I played Henry VIII was with Peter. He directed The King's Mare in 1966, and it was through the BBC hoys seeing that that I was asked to do the series on television. You never know who's out front."

The other directors in his first season are Wendy Toye, who 10 years ego directed him in Robert and tragi-comedy in Greek drama and Elizabeth, the long-running as there is in Chekhov. If we musical about the Brownings, Toby Robertson, who last year directed the Prospect Theatre Company's pop version of Pericles, and Hovhannes Pilikian, a young graduate of RADA's directors course, who prised at first but then decided "it was an exciting idea to hreak away from the usual notion of the Queen as Mother Earth. And so much is expected of this woman—she has to be mother-wife. Very often Jocasta is a mother, but you couldn't helieve for a moment that she was a successful wife. I know it wasn't a love match, but unless there's a feeling that those two work as a love match, the human drama is diminished. In many ways it's a matriarchy developed from tha time when the King came along and served the Queen and was killed. Every year, another male came, they'd fight, and whoever won, tha Queen would breed from him for a year. So the Queen needs to be quite an animal, really."

Some of Keith Michell's ideas about Greak tragedy-and some of his enthusiasm for it-derives from the experience of playing in a radio adaptation of The King Must Die by Mary Renault, who has written on Oedipus for this year's Souvenir Programme. "I fell in love with the idea of Greek drama treated not only realistically, but as something that could happen to anyhody. Then I met Hovbannes, who says there's as much comedy can get these ideas into the right setting-which Ralph Koltai is designing—and can bave a primitive, tribal Oedipus, instead of the usual papier maché production, it should be quite exciting."

Keith Michell had been an art student and then an art teacher in his native Australia. What-ever he learnt about how to use space will stand him in good stead at Chichester, a theatre where the space offers extraordinary opportunities and poses extraordinary problems. The space is deceiving. It's not till you see someone up in that ironwork that you realize how hig a man looks in that roof. And this is one of the problems of designing for that theatrethe deceptive architectural space. In architecture one of the aims is to create space where it's not, and in theatre one of the aims is to destroy any space between you and the audienca." So the more Chichester's

Artistic Director understands about design, tha better. "I wanted a type of permanent set for this season. It had to be modified hecause the price was ridiculous, but the basic idea is still there. I've always worried about the Vistavision width of the stage, and I've tried to modify that somewhat. It's like most New York stages, which are very wide and long, and it leads to playing out front all the time. You don't feel you can turn away, because you lose your actine plane. I see all lose your acting plane. I got all four designers into one room and talked about it. I can't tell you the effect it had! They responded though, and I bope that out of it has come somethat out of it has come some that out of it has come some-thing quite good. You have difficulty with sight-lines, though the side seats can he more interesting than tha full fromals."

Music from the courts of Paris and London

Les Musiciens du Roi Oxford Town Hall

Stanley Sadie Les Musiciens du Roi are an English group, directed by Lionel Sawkins, who specialize in French music of around 1700. On Sunday afternoon, to round off the Oxford limb of the English Bach Festival, they repeated music by Lalande which they gave at the Oueen Elizabeth Hall last autumn, and happily coupled it with piecas hy two of Lalande's leading English contemporaries. Pelham Humfrey and, of course, Purcell: a nice cross-Channel comparison.

Listening to music, identical in function and period, from tha courts of Paris and London, tells one something fairly precise ahout national musical styles.

London music was very Frenchified after the Restoration, and Humfrey even studied in Paris; hnt although his expansive anthem O Give Thanks has a characteristically pathetic orchestral introduction his style is more direct, less designedly affecting, than that of Lalande's motets. Lalande had bigger forces at his call, and could use softsounding trios of flutes and viola (or bassoon) to colour his more pathetic supplications to the Almighty; his entire treatment, of harmony and line and texture, is more elahorate, more (in the Chorale more at home with the style. Of the soloists, I specially enjoyed Penelope Price Jones's clear, airy, sharply focused singing at the opening of the Jubilate, Richard Jackson's firm and warm haritone, and Paul Taylor's polished phrasing in his solos in the Exaltabo—one of which ended particularly heautifully, with the choir melting into the words and te clamabo, quietly impassing the style of the s ad te clamabo, quietly impassioned music enhanced by a soft halo of muted string tone. . Mr Sawkins conducted with a good grasp of the music. Be-sides the choral items, we had movements from Lalande's movements from Lalande's music for the king's supper table, a suite of G minor move-ments, reflective rather than spirited with the melancholy inner voice on the hassoon; and some Humfrey and Purcell songs from the high counter-tenor Rodney Hardesty, sung very evenly and rather plainly.

People were under-standably reluctant to come in from the year's first fine spring weekend for a work that is tecbnically out of season. The almost empty hall enguifed Dr Steinitz's size of the hall. early attempts to give an authentic brand of urgency to the drama. • From the start, the geography of the hall played against him. Using two continuos, be nevertheless unaccountably teamed the left hand continuo with right hand soluists, making quite un-necessary difficulties of en-semble for both parties. Not all his tempi were eccentrically quick; hut those that were stood out like so many sore thumbs. Why skate through the chorale about sin nailing Christ to the Cross as though it were verse one of 16? Why choose for the soprano's G major aria a tempo which suited neither voice, obbligato, ohoes nor continuo?

In due course, however, the greatness of the music transparticular, the arias were superb. Felicity Palmer and Jobn Shirley-Quirk both sang with thorough commitment, and so did Alfreda Hodgson and Kenneth Bowen, but without Gerald English's Evangelist I found mannered and prosaic (he was troubled by the top notes) and if Benjamin Luxon sang lesus's music beautifully it must have been from inner conviction, not outside stimulus. The chorus, inevitably, was too small for the arena. Divided they lacked nenetration; united, in the chorales, they were given no room to expand. The performance was in German. It remained, finally, correct but distant.

Brain, Holder and the weather make it a nasty day for batting

By John Woodcock Cricket Correspondent

NORTHAMPTON: Worcestershire (3 pts) beat Northamptonshire by 116 runs.

There is no holding Worcester-shire at the moment. Of their five one and three-day matches this season, they have won four and drawn one (rain affected against the Indians). Yesterday, in the Bensoa and Hedges, they trounced Northamponstire, whom they bowled out in the forty-first over for 113, after baving mada 229 for seven themselves.

Watts, who sent Worcestarshire in on Saturday, is probably wishing be had not. Certainly it was pretty nasty for hatting by the time Northamptonshire went in yesterday afternoon, the light, for the first hour of their immigs, being never better than gloomy. Rain, half and a cold wind combined to make it another vile day for cricker.

Leicestershire in the Benson and Hedges, Middleser in the John Player League, and Kent in the championship have all gone the way of Northamptonshire in the past 10 days, and as good a reason as any for this has been the bowling of Brain and Holder. Brain has come on enormously since returning to the game last season, after "retiring" in 1971. He is now fast and straight, and makes the ball leave the bar quite devastatingly at times. Bowling as he is at present, he would be no distract to an England side.

Neither, of course, would Holder, were ha not a West Indian. It was these two who put paid to Northamptonshire's chances in the first ten overs of their innings. Cass, the wicketkeeper, caught Willey and Steele off Holder and Mushtaq off Brain. Embodened by this, Gifford brought Headley up to third slip where he immediately caught Watts off Brain. With three slips, a gully, and a chort leg Worcestershire had not et all the sort of field associated with one-day cricket.

There had already been two abort breaks for rain, and with North-amptonshire at 22 for four, there was a slightly longer one, with the light bad eaough for a hawk to have had a job to see tha fast bowling, let alone Milhurn. From sideways on it was noticeable that Holder howled a yard or so slower to Milhurn than to the rect. to Milburn than to the rest. Not all fast howers are genile creatures, by any means, but Holder bas that reputation. Milburn expects no quarter, but that is different from receiping process.

When play was resumed, tea having been taken, we saw what could, in fact, have been an extract from a film of Milburn's last 100.

BRADFORD: Yorkshire drew

Rain quelled any doubts whether the Indians might survive York-shire's attempt to wring a late victory from the match at Park

Aveaue yesterday. With the In-dians' score at 122 for five wickets, and Mankad just out after a stay of one hour and a quarter, York-shire were entitled to consider there to be a chance albeit a slender one with a minimum of 20

So the Indians, who bad been pushed into the hackground by Yorkshire, and lo particular, Old, in this match, take on Lancashire today with a string of six drawn games behind them. In the last innings tha Indians had been asked to make 275 runs to win in 220 minutes. Yet a beginning as crippling as had been the start of their first innings almost certainly removed any possibility of their striking out for their target, and the mas to underline the point was again Old.

again Old.

This was quire a match for Old, with an excellent maiden century followed by his five wickets for 30 runs in the Indian first innings. Now, in Old's third over, a short ball induced burried evasive action for Bose, inadvertently leaving his bat in the ball's path. Hutton leapt high at slip to make a good catch. Then, to the last hall before innicheon, Old took a scintillating catch at third elip to put oat Naik. The Indians were than seven for two. Much laser, when the Indians had almost completed repairs, Old had Mankad caught behind.

Selkar, and Wadekar played attractively in a partnership of 54 runs for the third wicket. Cope eventually removed Solkar in his third over, and later Wadekar, with the hatsman down on one knee and sweeping. If the Indians had always been hard-pressed at some stage, then they must have been ancouraged by the performance with the bet and ball from Madan Lal.

Hemsley, of Sheffield United, like Balderstone of Carlisle United, is 100 good a cricketer to waste his time playing football. Both being in their thirties, thay are coming to tha time whea they will have the choice between playing first class cricket and second class soccer. Ar the moment, though, the pickings of football are too attractive. Hemsley is certainly a most invigorating cricketer: en enthusiastic fielder and a natural hitter of the ball.

Scots have no choice but to see themselves as others saw them as the onlooker saw it. At the Invercince Centre in Large Pesterday, Mr Ormond inflicted the punishment of having the players watch the entire match on videotape to the accompaniment of his verbal observations. He said: "I wanted to convince them of just how close they had played on a slippery pitch, and to emphasize how the opportunity to spread the play had been missed."

Having started the home inter-Having started the home inter-national championship as favourizes last Saturday, Scotland find them-selves playing Wales at Hampden Park tonight (8.0) in the meeting of the two teams beaten in their opening matches. The uncertainty created by those defeats, and the manner of their execution, may have contributed to the decision of both managers to postport until today the amountement of their teams. But there are other reasons for holding back.

Scotland's William Ormond Scotiand's William Ormond yesterday gave extra training to McGrain, the Celtic back, who missed tha match against Northern Ireland because of influenza. Over the weekend it was being confidently predicted that McGrain would play. Now, despite tha loss of Donachie, who was injured against Ireland, Mr Ormond may be awaiting proof that McGrain has recovered adequately from his illness.

Wales, too, have a doubtful starter, although little is being said about the matter. Apparently the effect of a knock Reece took in Saturday's match against England had not cleared up yesterday, and David Bowen will not decide on his fitness until he has seen him train this mornists. train this morning. The main item of Scotland's

With Jordan and Lorinier surging forward. Delglish could—help improve Scotland's midfield play which, on Saturday's evidence, is in need of any help that can be contrived. Such e formation might also free the long-legged Hutchison to perform his outlanking role he neglected against Ireland, and perhaps relicase a few of the thundering abots with which he has impressed in practice matches. Scotland's recent vector against Scotland's recent record against Wales is considerably better than that against Ireland.

Most Scots hope that Mr Ormond will do rather more than persuade the same team to adjust their tac-tics. Nh doubt better results could chat against Iteland.

Scots are finding consolution in the belief that it is better to have found the faults in the opening match of the home championship rather than after the team's arrival in West Germany. But with every game that passes, the opportunity for heipful adjustment diminishes. The team must be brought to their potential in the remaining two home internationals so that the warm up games in Belgium and Norway on the way to West Germany can serve their intended purpose of homing a finer edge of an otherwise finished team.

SCOTLAND: D. Haver Good 1940: A. tics. Nh doubt better results could he achieved in that way, but it is to be hoped that the manager has amended the view he conveyed before the Irish match that he was fielding his best possible t.am in the absence of McGrain. Others need to be convinced that Scotland's record of having scored only seven goals in their last 11 internationals could not be more emphatically Lorimer.

The twin striking force of Law and Dalglish, with which Scotland began last Saturday, did little to harass the Irish defence. Law, for all his aggression, more than once seemed that little shade slow in reaction to a snap chance, and Dalglish always achieved more when he came through from midfield, as he does for Celtic, than when shoved forward as e striker, pure and simple. an Otherwise Thussee Team,

No surprises in selection of promising national eight

With the international rowing season about to begin, the British national team crews were amounced yesterday. Interest immediately focuses on the eight but there are no surprises in tha selection made by the national coach, Bohumil Janousek. The eight—a composite Leander-Thames Tradesmen crew—contains the oarsmen who rowed in the recent Head of the River race with the order slightly reshuffled. The other two crews nominated are a coxless four, and the bronze medal winners in double sculis in last year's European champion-last year's European champion-ship, Baillien and Hart (Leander). Janousek's eight must be considered promising; it includes six world junior medal trinners between 1967 and 1969. With an average age of just over 23 years, all must be considered to be in their prima and overall the crew is an exciting combination.

The cight is topped and tailed with the Thames Tradesmen's Olympic coxless four with Leander providing the engine room. Sweeney, with half a decade of international experience behind him, gains the cox's seat. One of the key positions in the eight is given to the oldest member of the crew, 26-year-old Smallbone, with the world junior gold medal winner (1967), Matheson, and the Olympic double sculls finalist, Crooks, at five and six.

The 1972 Cambridge stroke and Olympic consuman, Maxwell, esems at first sight to be underplaced in the three seat. But this is only the initial selection and in the long four months' competition ahead before the world championships, Janousek has time to make any changes in the crew or their tition.

The British national training team's racing schedule starts in just over two weeks' time in Mainhielim (1-2 Juna), followed by Ratteburg (15-16 June), Mottingham (29-30 June), Henley (4-7 July), the national champtonships at Nottingham (20-21 July), and Duisburg (25-27 July) before the world champtonships in Lucerne (4-8 September).

(4-8 September).

It is a long and exhausting road abead and the main challenge to the eight, in particular, may be more mental than physical considering their early formation. In the centre of the limetight, they must be prepared to take the brunt of objective criticism. It is likely that Janousek has made such an early initial selection to remove some international com-experimental purposes.

Among Oliver's many victories are three in the Scottish Grand National—as well as riding one himself in his younger days—but he is probably best known for his near misses, four seconds in the Aintree Grand National.

John Bomford, the Warcestershire permit holder, jockey Robin Dickin and Moss Royal maintained a 100 per cent record at the course to the Milsington Hurdle. All three have been to Ayr only three times and have won on each visit. Moss Royal, the 11-10 favourite, won easily by five lengths.

camps to win the Sinnington Handicap Stakes but here I am inclined to take a different line.

Lovelight, my choice on this occasion, landed a gamble when she won at Newbury last month and Silver Tiger, the colt that she beat there, has underlined her performance by winning his next race at Brighton. Willie Carson is tiding Lovelight for Barry Hills today.

Together they may also win the Glasgow Stakes with Soldier Prince and the Micklegate Handicap Stakes with Avon Valley. The handicapper may have treated Avon Valley leniently. He was after all trying to give that improved sprinter Singing Bede 3 lb when he was heaten a length and a half by him at Haydock Park last month.

On top of that a glance through last year's form book gives him a definite edge over Trillium. His last race at Bath should be ignored because there had been not just one but two false starts, the one thing in the world guaranteed to appet a fast starter as Carsoo pointed out yesterday when we were discussing yesterday's race.

Federation's agreement with WT criticized

The agreement made earlier this ear between the international Lawn Tennis Federation, the governing body of the sport, and World Team Tennis, organizers of the American inter-city league, will meet with stroog criticism at the federation's annual meeting in Amsterdam oo July 10. France, West Germany, Italy and Sweden are to propose what is in effect a vote of censure oo the federation's committee of management.

The four countries will ask that the agreement with World Team Tennis be tewritten in a way which abides by the decision made at an extraordicary general meeting in Londoo last Janoary. In a joim proposal they also say that a new agreement should include the provision for fices and penala new agreement should include the provision for floes and penalties in case of violation.

They are also asking the full meeting to investigate thoroughly the committee of management's agreement with WTT and to take the necessary steps to prevent any expetition.

Another row is also expecte over the management committee's decision, made at the Londoo meeting to set up two separate working groups to deal with men and women professionals.

These groups would include the Americans Jack Kramer and Donald Bell, also Geoffrey Mullis, who runs the Commercial Union Grand Prix for the ILT. They are known to favour an independent secretary, But the federation have already dismissed this and their secretary, Basil Reay, said yesterthat there was still a good deal of feeling among countries against the need for baving separate working groops.

In addition to the errors forced upon them, both made more because the opposition demanded that they go holdly for the lines. Borg's errors increased as Newcombe's declined. The crux came in the third set when Borg had two break points for a 4--2 lead. But the powerfully asture Newcombe won 10 of the last 12 games, of which six went to deuce.

1970, which enabled a person not yet a party to an actioo to apply to the court for discovery of documents in the possession of the other side.

In January, 1971, Mr Shaw bad an accident when driving a fork lift truck at the Vauxhall works. He said that hy some mishap his clothiog caught in something aloogside, he was thrown off the truck, his foot came off the dead man's pedal, and because there was a defect in the machine the automatic safety derice hy which the truck would stop if a man's foot came off the pedal did not work, and he was crushed against a wall. Solicitors on his behalf wrote to Vauxhall's solicitors making very Vauxhali's solicitors making very vague allegations about unsafe sys-tem of work and so on; but in a telephone cooversation on Decem-ber 8, 1971, the solicitors did give ber 8, 1971, the solicitors did give a general description of the acci-dent, saying that the machine was defective and that a number of men had complained of difficulty

As Mr Shaw was getting legal aid his solicitors thought it would be a good thing, before issuing any proceedings, to try to get inspecproceedings, to try to get inspec-tion of the ratious reports about the truck. They asked for forms and records as to the inspection, mainteoance and repairs done to the truck for two years before and one year after the accident. That request was not compiled with; so they applied to the district regis-trar under section 31 before getting permission to go on with legal aid permission to go on with legal aid-for if the records showed that the machine was well inspected, main-

As before the Theft Act the hus-hand would not have been a com-petent witness in similar pro-ceedings against his wife, stress was laid on two priociples of construction of statutes: (11 the presumption that the legislature did not intend to make a substantial alteration in the law beyond what it expressly declared; and (2) a penal statute should be interpreted in favour of the liberty of the substantial.

Nothing in the judgment should be taken as derogating from those priociples, but to approaching sec-tion 30 (3) one had to bear in mind the far-reaching changes made by the two preceding subsections. Thus at common law husbands and Thus at common law hushands and wives could not steal from one another, at least wheo living together. Certain limited inroads were made upon that principle by sections 12 and 16 of the Married Women's Property Act. 1882, and section 1 of the amending Act of 1884, as well as the closely similar provisions of section 36 of the Larceny Act, 1916. But although those enactments gave the parties

But the policy underlying that paragraph could be found in earlier paragraphs which stressed the need for early inspection and the availability of information. The report also said that a potential plaintiff should be required to set out in open letter in general terms his own knowledge or the fact that he had oo knowledge how the accident happened.

Where an open letter was writted and information gived, his Lordship thought it ought to be the general practice for discovery of such reports to be given if asked for—for the very reason that it helped towards a settlement; it enabled each side to know the strength or weakness of their case; and—particularly in a legally aided case—it might mean that legal aid was no looger forthcoming for the case to continue.

The registrar in the present case The registrar in the present case had made the order for discovery under section 31 but the judge was the ordinary course after closure of pleadings.

His Lordship thought the judge had placed too much stress on rule 3. Before their Lordsbips, Mr Russell had said that in substance there was only one cause of com-plaint—that the machine was defective and he indicated that it was plaint—that the machine was defective—and he indicated that it was likely that if the reports showed the machine to have heen properly maintained the legal aid committee would not feel able to support the continoance of proceedings.

That made a striking difference to the case. As a result of tha discovery and inspection asked for it might be that the claim would no longer be proceeded with. That would be a great saving in costs and trouble to all concerned. Alternatively, if it showed up defects it might give rise to a settlement without the need of litigation. An order should be made under section 31 for the discovery of the documents mentioned in the application. The appeal should be allowed.

LORD JUSTICE BUCKLEY, concurring, said that the power to order discovery before proceedings were commenced was certainly not one to be used as an aid to fishing expeditions to enable a plaintiff to discover whether he had get a ooe to be used as an aid to fishing expeditions to enable a plaintiff to discover whether be had got a case at all. His Lordehip agreed with the Master of the Rolls on the desirability of a prospective plaintiff who proposed to apply for discovery under section 31 to formulate the nature of his allegation and claim in writing before requesting disclosure and before launching any application under the section; and when he put his application hefore the court it would still be for him to satisfy the court that the order he was seeking would or was likely to dispose of the dispute or save costs.

An important aspect of the matthe for any court to bear in mind was the public Interest where the plaintiff qualified for legal aid. In such a case his advisers were under a duty to inform the legal aid committee of their view of his prospects of succeeding in the ection and to put before the committee any change in that respect, and it was undesirable that proceedings should be brought or continued with legal aid beyond a point at which it was reasonably clear that the plaintiff bad no substantial prospects of success. There was therefore a special ground for saying that advisers of legally aided parties should have information as early as possible on matters which might affect that aspect of their position in litigation. LORD JUSTICE ORMROD, also concurring, said that nowadays, for one reason or another, the let-ter before action, which used to be a useful document used sometimes as a rery heluful vardstick in assessing credibility and so on, had now become an empty for-mality. If the plaintiff was going to ask the court to exercise a dis-cretion in his favour it was only fair that he should set out his account of bow the accident bap-peoed or a statement that he did

The court had to decide whether the offences charged were offences: "with reference to "the appellant's husband. The signatures, if genuine, would bave directly affected the busband's rights and obligations and the offences of forging the signatures were offences: "with reference to "the appellant's husband. The appeal was dismissed. The court altered the order for discovery in respect of the truck to 12 months before and after the Solicitors: Registrar of Criminal Appeals; Mr Leslie D. . . that will take some finding. However, we think we can offer you the next best thing. Many of our problems are predictable but we try to be original and forward looking in our solutions. Our Personnel Department is already substantial - more than 60 staff excluding Training. This means that those involved in recruitment and industrial relations have substantial professional back up from teams specialising in salary administration, organisation development, management development and general administration As our Company continues to grow so we need to grow too in order to cope with rapidly increasing "frontfine" work. Two more Senior Personnel Officers are needed immediately, Both are replacements for existing staff, promoted within the organisation — promotion that you could look forward to also. The work will emphasise recruitment: one of the appointments will be for "on-site" work, the other will involve substantial travel within the U.K. Practical industrial relations experience would be valuable but not essential. The ebility to assist colleagues working in other sections of the division (for instance in Organisation Development and Management Development departments) would be an added asset. The more of a generalist you are, or have the potential to be, so much the better.

We are big enough to take account of your own particular skills and interests in defining the precise work responsibilities. These we would want to discuss with you at the interview. You must, however, have a degree or IPM membership and at least one year's relevant personnel experience. Experience outside Personnel will be seen as an advantage. You will be under 30. Starting salary will be not less than £3,250 per annum (and could be more) depending on you and the job we jointly define. The armchair search for life in

Is there life elsewhere, and if ters to the aimless broadcasting of what does it look like— of messages.

People, plants or even rocks? What this implies is that we In the hest traditions of openmindedness, the Royal Society devoted its symposium recently to "The recognition of alien to "The recognition or all life". Pearce Wright's report of the occasion (The Times, May 3) shows that even enthusiasts such as Professor Carl Sagan of Cornell University are seized of the difficulties of making con-tact with other life forms.

Two more general questions arise. What importance should he attached to these largely speculative exercises? And is it in the best interests of science that speculations about life else-where should be used as they were recently as an umbrella for more tangible lines of investigation which are of great potential importance—the bear-ing of the microfossils in ancient sedimentary rocks on the origin of life on the earth, for Philosophically, the problem of slien life is intriguing. Cosmologists, from Galileo on, have learned how dangerous it is to entribute uniqueness to the nearby parts of the universe. If life has evolved on the earth, it is prudent to suppose that the conditions that beve made this possible also occur elsewhere. In this spirit, it may be reckoned that something like a million (out of 100,000 million) milion (out of 100,000 milion) stars in our galaxy are sufficiently like the sun, and may support planetary systems like the solar system, to be candidates for a search for extraterrestrial life.

The optimists assume that one star in ten, say 100,000 altogether, may support civilisations gether, may support civilisations at some stage of development. Given that our galaxy is one of a multitude, it is plainly wise to suppose that alien life exists. But where? And how to recognize it? The enthusiasts are probably right in eaying that, as things are, the best hope of making contact is by radio-communication. The trouble is that even if there are es many as 100,000 stars in the gelaxy with planets supporting life, the nearest of them is likely to be some hundreds of light years away.

Worse still, the difficulties of establishing communication are formidable. Sensitive radiotelescopes have to be dedicated to search of the sky for decades or even centuries on end. And even then, it must be hoped thet people elsewhere are not merely much cleverer than we are but sufficently well endowed to have devoted large numbers of radiotelescopes and transmit-

outer space

What this implies is that we may have to live with the uncomfortable conviction that there is life somewhere else in the universe, and most probably in the galaxy, but that it will not be possible to learn more about it without a radical improve-ment of our technology.

In the past few years, considerations like these heve not deterred those whose bearts heve heen set on finding civilizations as they are called elsewhere in the galaxy. In the United States, Project Ozma has heen used to search for mean heen used to search for mean-ingful signals from a few hundred stars in the galaxy. There are plans to use the huge radio-telescope at Arecibo, Puerto Rico, for similar tasks. Even if the galaxy is quite densely populated with other civilizations, successful identification is reckoned to be likely only in a few tens of millions of years. Plainly there is a case for asking thet in the interests of taxpayers, exobiology should remain an armchair science.

The same conclusion does not apply to the other topics raised under this umbrells at the Royal Society. As it happens, the past few months heve seen exciting developments in the study of microfossils from ancient rocks. For example, there is now good For example, there is now good evidence (from dolomites recovered from the Transvaal) that even 2,300 million years ago, there were organisms on the surface of the earth very similar to the blue-green algae widely distributed es water weeds on the surface of the earth

This discovery is important not merely because the bluegreen algae are complicated organisms whose eppearance in such early rocks suggest that the pace of evolution was more rapid than previously thought, but also because it has a bearing on how the amosphere of the earth has the atmosphere of the earth has changed.

There is also great virtue in the attempts being made to throw light on how inorganic meterials such as methane and ammonia, both of them constituents of the primasval etmosphere of the earth, may be used to produce chemicals of the kind found in things living now. (Hunting for hiogenic now. (Hunting for biogenic chemicals on the surface of Mars is probably a less useful occupa-tion.) Whether it is seemly, let alone wise, that these important topics should be subsumed under the banner of exobiology is another matter

Balancing the books and keeping the balance of power

The Defence Secretary Mr Roy Mason, has personally commis-sioned so in-depth investigation into the security aspects of Britain's hurgeoning offshore oil and gas industries. The Defence Scientific Advisory Council, the five-year-old think tank which is stocked with experts from the universities and industry, is to study the problems arising both in war and peace, and report early next year.

There are now about 25 dril-British edge of the contineoral shelf and the number should beve risen to 40 by the end of this year. In addition some 23 production platforms are alreedy pumping natural gas io the direction of people's kitchens, and the first precious trickle of oil should start flowing towards the mainland later this year. With £1,000m already invested in oil exploration in the invested in oil exploration in the North and Celtic seas, e number of ministries, including the departments of Energy and of Trade and Industry, have made known their concern about safety precautions in the face of fairly obvious range of threats.

In peacetime, a threat could come from Arab hijackers or IRA bombers. In war, the kind of threat to such an intrinsic part of a nation's wellbeing is too obvious to need further emphasis. Yet so far no clear pipelines are admittedly being buried wherever the nature of the seabed makes it feasible the seahed makes it feasible—and gas fields on patrol. The Labour administration, however, might be prepared to invest more substantially in the defence of Britain's increasingly important energy resources if the study of the Defence Scientific Advisory Council suggests that this would be worthwhile-even to the extent to ordering e new class of ships should this prove necessary.

The council's investigation is

The council's investigation is entirely separate from the more comprehensive defence review which is currently being conducted at the ministry. But it reflects the same desire to take a long, thoughtful look at the balance and purpose of Britain's forces. It also reflects the Government's inclination to give priority to the defence of the British homeland and then Europe, at the expense, perhaps. Europe, at the expense, perhaps, of more distant, long-standing interests overseas.

This is the sort of priority which Mr Mason will have to explain to his American counterpart Mr James Schlesinger when he flies to Washington at the and of this month—a few days after a similar meeting with Herr Leber, the other member of Nato's big three, in Bonn. No decisions on the defence review will have been reached by then, but Mr Mason will obviously face American pressure to main tain some sort of presence in the

Some cuts will be made in defence spending this summer as a result of the £50m saving announced by Mr Healey in his Budger speech. The £1/8m sav-ing which was decided on by the Conservative Government last Conservative Government last year can be met by delaying a number of equipment programmes a process helped by some inevitable time alippage resulting from the three-day week earlier this year. But the additional f50m means that a number of contracts will now have to be terminated altogether—although I understand that no major programmes are involved.

Consideration of the new long-

Consideration of the new long-term, broader ranging decisions to be taken under the defence to de taken under the derence review is not expected to hegin until Parliament has recessed for the summer. Mr Mason and his ministerial colleague have asked for e detailed breakdown of Britain's commitments including the costs of each—and also for several cost-cutting some of these estimates are not expected to be ready notil after the start of the recess. Since the review will be presented to Par-liament in the form of a White Paper which takes time to prepare—it is hard to envisage the operation being completed until the autumn or even perhaps some date nearer to the end of Everyone at the ministry is being very tight-hipped about possible areas for economy. The simple reason, it is said, is that simple reason, it is said, it that at this early stage nobody knows. A number of cuts in British com-mitments appears obvious—in-cluding withdrawal from Singa-pore and even maybe Maita. But the savings from simple with-drawals would be trifling unless the traces concerned were dethe troops concerned were de-mobilized and the services thus reduced in number.

One possibility must be the disbanding of all or some of the remaining five Gurkha betralions. The Gurkhas are a remarkably cost-efficient component of the Army. There are also strong emotional ties, and any threat to their existence would evoke an even stronger reaction in Royal Berkshire than it would in Nepal. On the other hand, al-though the Gurkhas have proved themselves in a variety of places. and situations, they are very much an east of Suez outfit, and with the future emphasis likely to be placed more than ever on Nato, they could begin to look like an anachronism. Much must depend on the long-term force levels that the Government fore-sees it necessary to maintain in Hongkong.

A reduction in the number of oaval dockyards is one possibility that has been widely canvassed. And whatever cuts are eventually decided upon, they will certainly be accompanied by schminterative alimening at the ministry itself.

It is certainly time for a fresh look at some of Britain's defence commitments, and the Government's policy so far seems to be the right one. What Mr Mason and his colleagues must bear in mind is that they are concerned in an exercise not in contential. in an exercise not in cost-costing one designed to bring down the costs and to push up the efficiency. If they accomplish both together, they will have earned the thanks of everyone, not just of the Labour left.

models, each of which will give a sample of the cuts necessary to achieve a certain target. But tary of the Union of Post Office Workers, said yesterday that Britain's postal service was creaking end on the verge of collepse. Few would beg to differ. From all sides there are complaints about the decline in quality of service, the delays in delivery, the ever increasing charges.

The chief complaint is that first-class mail does not reach its destination by the next working day, as the average user believes the Post Office pro-mised its customers when it first introduced the two-tier system in 1968. The Post Office says it made no such promise; it merely set itself a target of delivering 94 per cent of first-cless mail within 24 bours.

cless mail within 24 bours.

But even that target is nowhere near reached, according to two week-long surveys carried out by the Post Office Users' National Council. The first, in October, 1971, showed a success rate of 87 per cent and the second, in February, 1972, e success rate of only 84 per cent. The Post Office has, until recently, claimed a 92 per cent success rate, but it has modified this to 88.9 per cent on the basis of its own survey last September.

last September. Given an average of 35,000,000 lenters posted every day, of which roughly half are sent firstwhich roughly half are sent first-class, the 11 per cent failure rate edantited by the Post Office means e potential 2,000,000 dis-satisfied recipients a day, or more than 600,000,000 every year. From this perspective, the number of complaints ectually made is surprising only in being so small.

POUNC dealt: with a mere 306 complaints about postal delays last year, but these did account last year, but these did account for almost one third of all complaints made to the council, including those about telecommunications. Those figures are more indicative of the public's lack of awareness of POUNC's act of swareness of FOUNCs, existence, however, than of its satisfaction with the postal service or of its unwillingness to complain, though there is certainly an element of the latter. Lord Peddie, chairman of POUNC, feels that its most important and constructive role is that of an independent body (its members, though appointed by members, though appointed by the minister in charge of the Post Office, represent a wide variety of public groups and associations) which the Post Office is required by statute to consult about all major proposals concerning its main services. It is thus able to provide a certain amount of public eccountability, and also protect the Post Office itself from excessive pressures rom the Govern-ive pressures rom the Government.

The 1969 Post Office Act made the Post Office an independent corporation, but it is still dependent on the Government for financial help. The Tory Government's decision at the end of last year to cut back sharply on the £4,250m five year.

development programme an-nounced in 1972, was greeted with dismay by the Post Office. Takes are now going on with the present Government about the proposed £148m cut for the current financial year.

During the lanest year for which there are published accounts, 1972-73, the Post Office made a loss of £64m, its first deficit since 1956-57. The postal service, which is the traditional money-losing side of the Post Office operations, lost a record £42.5m. The total Post Office deficit for the year ended March 31, 1974, is believed to be more than £125m. and this is expected rent financial year.

than £125m, and this is expected to reach nearly £300m this year unless additional revenue is forthcoming.

Last month the Post Office proposed increases of 1p on first-class mail and 1p on second-class mail, as well as increased telephone and other telecom-telephone and other telecommunication charges, to take effect in June. This, it hopes, would bring in an additional £275m in a full year. The proposals are now being considered by POUNC and by the Price

Letter post charges went up by ip last September. If the proposed new charges are brought in, the first-class letter rate will have risen by 50 per cent in less than e year. The cent in less than e year. The Post Office has produced figures, bowever, which show that we still have the cheapest postal service in the industrialized world. It is also interesting to note that the penny post, introduced in 1840, is equivalent to a 3p cost today. Letter charges have almost exactly kept in step with inflation. with inflation.

the dock in the courtroom of Pretoris by Mr Toivo Je Toivo, an African from South West Africa, in 1968. He was promptly sentenced to 20 years imprisonment, under retrospec-tive legislation, for offences connected with his and his people's struggle against the illegal amexation and continued occupation by South Africa of the former mandate territory of South West Africa. In the larger, philosophical sense, his words are true as he meant them; but seen through a narrower focus they are true in a more bitter sense. Those who impose unjust suffering, unable to silence the voice of conscience within them, will tend to bate not themselves but their victims, and to increase the suffering accordingly.

Just such victims, of just such people, are Mr Toivo and the other political prisoners on South Africa's Robhen Island. Mr Athol Pugard, most disting-uished of South African writers, nished of South African writers, has produced an immensely powerful and moving play called The Island (et present to be seen at the Ambassador'e Theatre in London) in which the prisoners stage an edaptation of the Antigone of Sophocles. Creon speaks:

Take her to a desert island and there wall her up within a cell, with enough food to acquit our hands of the taint of her blood. The South African enthorities hear that they are considering the complete withdrawal from the prisoners of all facilities for study. (One of the ways-indeed, the chief way-in which e prisoner there trees to his sanity and personality intact is to take degrees or other prisoner there tries to keep is to take degrees or other examinations by correspondence.) That it would not be especially surprising if the Vorster regime did take this step, and worse after it, was made clear in a moving article by Miss Mary Benson in The Observer e few weeks ago, in which she gave details of the campaign of cruelty waged on Robben Island. But there was one episode, which took place last year, which she did not refer to, and which is so profoundly symbolic of the situation foundly symbolic of the situation there that I think it is worth A case was brought in the South African courts by two Robben Island prisoners, Mr Hassin and Mr Venkatrathnam. It was against South Africa's Commissioner of Prisons and the commandant of Robben Island, as legally responsible for con-ditions there, and the petitioners ditions there, and the petitioners asked the court to compel the respondents to restore to the two prisoners their right to study and to have books from the prison library, both of which were denied to them; to order the release from solitary confinement of Mr Hassim, who was in it, and to declare such treatmant in his case illegal; to direct the restoration to him of such privileges as smoking, also denied to him; and to enforce now seem determined altogether to destroy their political prisoners as buman beings, and I a copy of the prison regulations, which was being withheld, contrary to the provisions of the Prisons Act.

The background to this case was e petition which 49 of the prisoners had drawn up, detail-ing a list of bumiliations, deprivations, abuses and denials of justice to which they bad been subjected over a long period, including one serious general assault. From this petition, and from the affidavits in the court proceedings, a picture emerges of the way in which men deter-mined to break the spirit of those helpless in their charge can do so if those in higher authority are willing to allow it. Arbitrary changes in routine. adversely affection the prisoners, were made; the clesses in which literate prisoners taught illiterate ones prisoners taught illiterate ones to read and write were stopped; arbitrary (and illegal) deprivations of meals were ordered; warders would only address the prisoners in Afrikaans, though they knew many of them did not speak or understand it; letters arriving for prisoners were kept back for weaks on order were arriving for prisoners were kept hack for weeks on end; meny other similer practices took place. Most of them (apart from the assault) were trivial, but added up (and there were dozens of them) they provide e feir approximation to bell.

Mr Hassim had drafted the petition (be was alleged in en affidavit by the prison commandent to bave delivered it, too, but this was later admirted to be false); following this, and an false); following this, and an incident in which he refused to hand over hie library books, contending that the order was onlewful, he wes put in solitary confinement for six months. Mr

Venkatrathnam was not, but was deprived of his right to study for a degree and of his access to the prison library. The prison enthorities contended that the prisoners had no such a case at all. The judge re-jected this submission, saying that "There is, in our law, e strong presumption against ex-cluding the power of the Courts to come to the aid of a person who has suffered wrong. . . ." The respondents contended next that there was no legal right on the part of prisoners to study or to have books, and this conten-tion was upbeld, the judge declaring that these were pri-vileges, not rights, end thet the prison authorities had the legal power to deny them, and that he had no legal power to compel their restoration; be said of the prison enthorities, however, ther "the reasons which they bave advanced for their decision in these two cases are most uncon-vincing. The respondents then claimed that Mr Hassim had not been sentenced to solitary con-finement, though be bed been locked up alone all day and night for five months in a cell meafor five months in a cell measuring seven feet by eight feet, and not allowed to work or to bave any book but the Bible: this was not "solitary confinement" for punishment, but "segregation" for good order. The judge rejected the sophistry, and he was particularly severe on another statement by the prison commandant ther an official card on Mr Hassim's cell door, which on Mr Hassim's cell door, which stated that he was in solitary confinement, end as punishment, and gave full details, was incorrect and had been given out through the fault of the record clerk. Even a South African judge would have none of that: "I am animpressed by this explanation. I am not told where expanation. I am not not where the record clerk got his information from. Did he invent the cause of isolation? Did he guess the date when the sentence was imposed? And how did he establish the date when the sentence expired? These questions are not unexpend. I also necessary are not answered. It also seems to me very strange that the commanding officer or his deputy would have signed a card con-taining all this incorrect information."

Mr Hassim was ordered released from solitary confinement. Finally, the prison enthorities were ordered to supply prisoners with copies of the prison regulations, and the judge declared that they had no right to withhold these. Costs were awarded to both prisoners. A limited but genuine victory, then. But you do not defeat evil with impunity; mark what fol-lows. Not long ago, a few morkls after the case, the South African prison regulations were officially amended, to ensure that all access to courses of study, to library books and to work would thenceforth be formally declared to be at the absolute discretion of the prison authorities. The new regulations also mailes the prison authorities to the prison authorities. entitle the prison authorities to keep prisoners in a condition of segregation indistinguishable in practice from solitary confinement. In other words, Mr Hassim and Mr Venkatrathuam are the last prisoners in South Africa who will ever be able to bring an action against the autho-

Michael Leapman reports on a weekend in New York:

When I read in The New York Times that the Bronx County Historical Society was organizing a walking tour of Woodlawn Cemetery, I dropped plans to go to the races and reached for my subway map. Woodlawn is, quite appropriately, the last stop on the line and when the train arrived there only I and one other person remained in the carriage. I asked him whether he was going on the tour and be said he was. A lawyer from Denver, be was a connoisseur of such expeditions. "I've just come from a wine tasting in Harlem", he said. "It was supposed to be a historic buildings tour but we kept stopping et bars and it rurned into a wine tasting." To prove his point be stumbled on to the station platform.

The early years of this century were a period of unprecedented industrial expansion. Taking the average of 1896-1900 as 100, indus-trial production rose to 183 in 1911-15. Output of electri-cal energy increased from 45 million kilowatt-hours in lion kilowatt-hours on the ere of the First World War. These two decades bave been described as those of Italy's industrial takeoff. comparable to 1783-1802 in

The war further helped industrial progress, particu-larly for companies engaged in military production, such as Fiat. At the same time, it brought a deliberate artempt to more industries eway from the North to regions like Emilia and Tuscauy, where factories were farther from possible battle zones and air raids.

Fascism failed to end disparity

Fascism failed to over-come the disparity between north and south. Census sta-tistics for 1937-39 showed that, of the country's that, of the country's 4200,000 industrial workers, 55.3 per cent lived in the north, 16.3 per cent in the centre, and 18.4 per cent in the the reach the south. The Second World War caosed widespread destruction of plant everywhere, but represented a greater economic setback for the more fought-over south. The years since the war bave seen a concerted on-slaught on diversifying away from the north and promot ing the development of the south. Millions of pounds have been poured into the Mezzogiarno. It is deliberate government policy to make the big parastatal corporations like ENI (Ente Nazionale Idrocarburi) site their major new projects in the Mezzogiorno. Private industry was at first reluctant to follow suit, but in recent years has increasingly complied, as a result both of government pressure and as the realization that many locations in the north have reached saturation point in housing, social services, communica-tions and environmental seley. PIEDMONT: A EUROPEAN REGION

If we review the precress that has been achieved by Piedescet over the past twenty years based on the available social and economic satisfies, we find that his provin rate has been one of the taneat and most intensive in Europe during the presswar period. In this area of 25,000 square kilemetres, the population has increased by almost a millionaricom 3.70.000 to 4.500,000—since 1951, an overall rise of 30% in the period. Industrial employment has risen a ten laster, by 50%: today 940,000 are employed in industry compared with 63,700 in 1951. In the past decade alone, Pedamont 2 gross instrust a product has risen by 15% in current figures (1.5,700,000m. in 1973, compared with 1.3,433,000m. in 1963), and even when expressed in rue terms production has risen by almost 100%. If, however, we wish to find out the truth about Pedamont today, about the regional community in which we work and the community we should like to crack, we must not be communic and their figures alone. We should look beyond those to understand the social, exonomic and erritorial processes that have combined to produce this insuring crowth and which in turn have been activated and influenced by that growth, in every industrial society, whether it is in the West or in Communic territory, economic growth is a dustitate progress achieved by a greater or less degree of imbalance, but one that is always present. I refer to territorial imbalance between deferent geographical areas, to actorial imbalance between industry and agriculture and within industry isself—between industry and agriculture and within industry isself—between the schoologically advanced by an or recovered the substance of the trees industrial process.

In the these industrial and extrained private spending, to many only a few of the more relevant cases.

In Italy, these imbalances are associated with the complicated bisoary of our country, which has resulted in a marked division between the North—which participated to recent and in South which was quite markened by those changes.

Although publical ursky was later achieved in Italy, it was not sufficient to bring accurately any degree of economic unification, especially as the proceedings politics adopted by not-markened process. In the comment of the south which was quite markened by those changes.

The process of privatization has meant the depopulation of the country-side. In 1951, we had $50,000 working on the land, now only signify more than 20,000. This is a feature of industricitized economics and to an expent it is meastary, but it is one that calls for juddance and control if se are to avoid serious social and even economic consequences, said and or Piodone in mind that more than $60,000 people are till fiving in mountains reast, and in Piodone more than half of the territory consists of mountains. There were the there and create that wealth without enjoying the same level of services as in urban areas is often too high.

The process of this raiser length: introduction is in clarity the nature of the problems to which the development of Piodonom has given rise and the role that Piodonom should assume as a regional authority in administering the regional community.

The Italian Republic is divided into eventy regions, if which fifteen have a "standard" the role of the Regional Authority is a basic concern in our Commitment for any built. On the purely regional level, the targets that we have set ourselves in our pleasants policy may be surmearized as follows:

at Restoration of territorial equilibrium. The municipousing of the Turn man, a contributory factor being the commissive process of urbanization and industrialization, must be stoned down and emportant must be given to more sustained growth in the less favoured areas where the former steels and emporate upon car production. Their will be the objectives of the responsi development plan which we expect to draw in by the end of the year.

The prim will be based on well-documented analysis of the true stockhole in Pfeliment. Most of the research has already been completed, but some is still under way and will be available within the next few months.

The Kegion has a whichly instrument to provide assistance in this preliminary and exploratory pourse: IRES listenate the provide accomminate a social), the first response planning research matrice to have been established in Hally. This was ret up here error 1959 and 1973 by the province of Turns, letter joined by the other provinces of Ffedment, and it has now become a regional body.

Over the past year, the research findings and recommendations of IRES have been the subject of full compilation with all the Region's LEO-I local authorities, the unpost, econymic bodies and associations their representative of the Federomese community. We are not in a continuous first disting the plan, which will incorporate information acquired through those occasions and discussions. As a result, our planning policy will have been evolutely by a process of truly democratic participation.

All the same time, we are training ready the unstruments we need to administer the plan. One of these, the "Enter di subserpt agricultural development beauty for responsal formation." The Responsal Council is now represent proceed beginning on a "regional furniture company." and on industrial areas which will probably play a vital part is creating medium-scale companies.

There will also be a "oratic development board", the "Enta per le scilippo dell'artitistatio", to promote modernization and the runforment of a saster which employs about 120,000 in manufacturing activities afone.

With this in mind, the controlect regional provimient has recordly drafted a law granting in-interest loans to furns of traitment, the main intertion being to encourage technological development and cooperation between artisans.

Once is has all the working instruments it needs, the plan will key down authorities for the Region over the five year period 1974/1978 and at the samb time it will sake more general objectives to govern the actions of all bodies operating in Placemont, in both the runbit and private sector.

In so doing, it is our arowed political objective not to use the Regions as an erecula to reparate datherest social and ecocomic areas but to make regionalization a factor in increasing satisfied and interestional integration, a function that is in likely as integral part of the estimate that it of Preferent integration, a function that is in likely as integral part of the estimate therein they and the rest of Europe.

We for our part have always looked on European integration as a vital process for our con region, both socially and columity as well as decommendly. Nor are his allegations of dishonesty in the way that the tenets of the consumer society are sometimes applied: " instead of seeking man's advantage, offering what would truly serve his real necessities and developing society seeks only to emploit him for the benefit of production and of capital; threatening his liberty and undermining the genuinely human basis of life

He is equally rigorous in judging the proper behaviour of the church, in particular where money and pride are involved: "The search for the economic means necessary to pastoral action must viewer lead to compromises with any form of power—one is thinking naturally of political power and economic power—whi in any way would place in danger the full liberty of

The Archbishop is

Piedmontese : he was born 71 years ago in Centallo, near Cuneo, in the diocese of Fossano. He has been Archbishop of Turin since November, 1965, and one reason for the shock his arrival caused was not just that ha is strongwinded in his convictions but that his predecessor had long been ailing. His main inheritance was threefold : first an archbishopric which required to be put in order; second, a tradition of Piedmontese Catholicism dating largely from the last century which is energetic and above all practical—the tradition of St John Bosco, who founded the femous hospital in Turin for the maimed, the incurable in body and mind. The third element in this inheritance was a cityindeed a whole region—deeply feeling the effects of immigration, not only from he local countryside to the cities but also from the deep south, and a host of new social problems from schooling to dousing that came in the wake of industrial development carried out in conditions of a capitalist's dream. These conditions were not Cardinal Pellegrino's dream. Less than six months after his arrival in his archdiocese absolutely inadequate " The Cardinal does not seek to make light of the difficulties which face him after nine years in Turin. The bulk of the working class remains outside the church, he says. Televisioo advertisements are the Bible of many of them. There is a shortage of vocations to the priesthood and many priests are discouraged by the size of the problem with which they are faced in an industrial society. The grim nature of work in the factories, the serious shortcomings in social justice and the values of the consumer society are all placing great obstacles in the way of a more human approach. Even when a certain level of prosperity has been reached, sensibility is not occessarily increased. When a priest extempted to make contact with a family in a newly built villa, he received the reply: "Leave us in peace ", an example which could be repeated, the Cardinal says bitterly, many times over.

Nevertheless, despite the disappointments and the conflicts with other interests io Turio, the archbishopric under Cardinal Pellegrino is providing one of the most enlightening xperiences anywhere in Italy of an attempt by a mild-mannered hut strongminded prelate with pronounced views on social justice to give the church a promoting role in modern lofty executive position with the Bancai Commerciale iana in Milan by 1937 when he had in leave the country. He took up the post of Director-General of the Sance Francese ed Italiana for South Ametics first in Peris and then in Buenes

From 1947 until 1953 he was Italian delegate at many international conferences and an adviser on economic and financial masters to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. He was elected to homent for the Milan-Pavia constituency in 1953 after having prepared an economic programme for the Liberals which was manimously accepted by the party's National Congress. This familiarity with financial problems edds to his credentials as a prominent northerner in taly's political life. For centuries Milan has been a leading commercial and financial centre. Malagodi speaks of an eighth-century document attesting to the commercial importance of Millan even at a time when the Louisard kings ruled from Pevia. Louisard Street testifies still further to this financial capacity of the Milanese as does the word to Lombard" in German hich he points out I so give something as a

Malagodi's familiarity with kinguages—he speaks perfect English, French, Spanish, German and probably others—underlines an ontward-looking mentality that is another marked feature of the north. He sees a certain connexion between Lombardy and the string of centres that moves southward from Amsterdam through Düsseldorf and Cologne to Frankfurt and Zurich, a connexion that could never be supposed to exist once one was south of the Appennines. But that is by no means the only way he looks at the north. He believes that the northern regions have a character of their own and that a change really does occur when one crosses the north has its marked differences : taking two leading seaports, he points out that the Venetians are well-known for their kindly disposition while the Genoese are regarded as being door. Politically, there is a strong difference hetween the northern bas of the Lower Po, with its heavy Christian Democrat tendencies, and the south bank, which delineates the beginning of Italy's main ommunist strooghold.

This assured sense of identity of the north does not, he maintains, distract his attention from the national aspect of Italy's political life. "I do not share", he says, " a certain contempt and reluctance to mingle with people from the South. He ascribas this outlook in part to the fact that early in his career he worked with the late Bruno Mattioli, former chairman of the Banca Commencials. the Banca Commerciale Italiana, who was a sontherner and was generally looked on as one of the ontstanding figures in Italian public life.

He rejects the view that southern politicians have in recent years taken over an unduly large proportion of the country's political life.
He says that, in political life, the point whether a colleague is a southerner or a northerner simply does not arise. And even when looking at the country's. can be no question of looking only at the north : the less developed south offers a substantial market and is a great purveyor of

However, he points out that the bureancracy is tirely so When he was at the Treasury, he had one head of department from Piedmont and one from the Abruzzi : all the rest were southerners.

He does not, however, feel that this is particularly important. North and south ught different characteristics to the country's unity. The differences are now somewhat less than they were hecause of the internal migrations and social changes. But they still exist, particularly in Venice, as a result of its millenmium of self-government which produces, apart from everything else, a "political masterwork". Lombardy itself under the Visconti tried and only narrowly failed to unite Italy, a task which fell in the last century We have never staked everything on the success of one single model, or on one type of product, or on one field of activity. With the result that we can claim success with many models, with many products, and in many fields of activity.

Alitalia also fly to Rome.

These days, Alitalia have Africa, the East, Australia and the Americas all sewn up.

Which is not really surprising.

Rome, our home town, is the natural gateway to the whole of Africa. And it lies conveniently on the direct route to the Middle and Far East, and South America. So, we're very well placed to fly you round the world.

What's more, we've got the best jets for the purpose. Like the new DC10. the world's most comfortable big jet, now operating on Alitalia intercontinental routes. Like the Boeing 747, giving you a pampered passage from Rome to North American destinations.

Here's another idea: since you're passing through Rome, why not take a few hours out of your journey to explore the most beautiful city in the world? No-one makes it easier to get there than Alitalia.

So, wherever in the world you want to travel, ask your Travel Agent about our frequent departures.

We'll take you under our big wings.

Montedison chief wields power from the shadow

Eugenio Cefis, chairman of the chemicals and fibres ress. He bas been given a suspended prison

20 days for polluting the sea near Corsica with " red mud " effluent from a chemical plant in Tuscany. His firm's " black funds ", secre ccounts running into billions of lire, used for finaocing political and pressure groups beve been up before Parliament's Anti-Corruption Commission.

In recem weeks Cefis's nama bas appeared in the press n coooexion with backstage chemes to gaio control over oewspapers, and with alleged machinations to the etriment of Italian lemocracy in alliance with Professor Amintore Fantani, secretary of the Christian

Democrat Party. The adverse publicity is lergely Cefis's own fault. He prefers to remain in the shadows. His public relations staff operate under different criteria than in the Anglo-Saxon world, and are not even free to distribute his

The casual newspaper Cefis was in tha dock over the " red mud " purely because of his ultimate respoosibility as chairman of the group, or that the probe into the " black funds " into the " black funds " related principally to events before his time. Even enemies edmit that, whatever his faults. Cefis bes shown remarkable determination and powers of leadersbip in rescuing Montedison from virtual benkruptcy. Cefis has loved secrecy since the September, 1943, ermistice when, es a young regular officer, he took to the Alpine foothills oear Lake Maggiore and became e Romen Catholic partisan commander. His power is now such ther, et least from the viewpoiot of public opinion, secrecy is becoming a liability. For, if only half of what is written is true, the air of mystery merely stimulates public curiosity. Cefis was born in 1921, the eldest of a building contractor's large family in the Friuli town of Cividale, near the present Yugoslav border. He was destined for a military career and was commissioned into the

Sardinian Grenadiers, which took only tall men—he is 6ft 2in, Cefis married young, in 1943, into a prosperous Milanese business family, and he has always paid attention to cultivating his persocal business interests

Leading a partisan baod gave him experience in command over men. a quality he subsequently applied in industry. It also hrought him into contact with the late Enrico Mattei, theo a member of the Committee of Liberation for Northern Italy. Though Cefis's career was to resemble in many ways that of Mattei, and to be equally controversial, be differed in one important respect. He appears to lack the ideological motivation which governed Mattei's drive to provide Italy with an ndependent energy base.

Mattei called Cefis to assist him when be decided, instead of liquidating the prewar Agip state petroleum corporation as ordered, to exploit the oatural gas deposits of the Po Valley, Cefis occupied several important posts after Agip gave birth to the ENI group. But, for reasons which have oever been clarified, Cefis parted company from Martei at the beginning of 1962, and left to devote himself to his private affairs.

He was on his plantation in Tanzania when Mattei died in an air crash in 1962. Hurrying back to Rome, be succeeded—thanks to the influence, it is related, of Professor Fantani, a frieud since a brief involvement in Christian Democrat Party politics in Milan—in gaining the deputy chairmanship of ENI, uoder a largely figurehead chairman. Professor Marcello Boldrini. Appointment to the chairmaoship came in 1967. His sights were soon set on Montedison, second in size only to Fiat as e private group, whose affairs were heading towards trouble, though the public did not know it—Cefis obtained Government authorization Government authorization for the parastatal ENI to buy, without publicity, enough shares to emerge in 1968 as the strongest iodividual sharebolder. Io

Io spring 1971 Cefis changed horses, moving to the chairmanship of Montedison Cefis epplied drastic medicine, closing down or selling off unproductive companies and writing off obsolete plant. This was reflected in a loss of 195.422m lire (£130m) in 1971 and of no less than 458.541m kire (£305m) in 1972.

Production was rationalized into four main branches of chemicals.

fibres, retailing and food. Latterly increasing attention bas been paid to banking and financial dealings on domestic and foreign markets. Montedison is consequently now back in the black. Although various criticisms have been made of the rescue operation, Montedisbu's turnround was pectacular.

Cefis thus sits in a sear of power, astride public and private enterprise. Formally be is answerable to a controlling shareholders. syndicate, half from the public sector and half from public sector and man from the private, but little has been heard of it recently. He pulls political strings like the head of a big public corporation, yet is not subject to the Minister of State Industry. In private industry be is a strong enough force to take on the Agnelli brothers of Fiat, and his friendships range from right-wing industrialists like Athilio Monti or Carlo Pesenti to Guido Carli of the Bank of Italy, through a broad spectrum of politicians extending to Senator Gastone Nencioni, a Milanese leader of the neotascist MSL. Cefis's motives and ambitions are frequently debated in the press. Piero Bassetti, Christian Democrat Premier of Lombardy, said recently that if Montedison was to be increasingly

After a short apprenticeship with Captain Holmes, Ottone joined the Turn Gozzetta del Populo and in 1948—having meanwhile graduated in law-was sent to London as their correspondent. In 1950 he was transferred to Bonn but returned to London in 1953 as correspondent of the Corr-

In those years he published most of s books, including A Russia Revisited, a penetrating enalysis of the changes that had occurred in Soviet society since his first stay there 10 years hefore.

In December 1968, Ottone was appointed editor of the Genoa Secolo XIX. There he could first test his aception of a newspaper based on thorough, indapendent reporting rather than literary excellence. The Genoa shipowners did not like it, but the circulation rose from 95,000 to 140,000, a high figure for an Italian provincial paper. It was main't for this reason that in March, 1972, the owners of the Corriers beginning to experience financial difficultieswanted him back as editor.

In two years Ottone transformed the Corriere della Sera from a newspaper well written, with an excellent literary page but rather conformist and respectful of economic and political power, into a truly independent paper in which good reporting is at a premium over literary

As a result its circulation increased to 800,000 copies, with peaks of 890,000. Ottone is planning to have a Rome edition published, which should bring circulation to about one million. In spite of this—or perhaps because of this—Ortone has not had an easy life as editor of the Carriere.

Bombs were thrown at the newspaper building a few months after he took over. A right-wing organization that purports to spesk on behalf of the so-called mient majority once covered Milan with posters inciting the readers of the Correct to boycost their paper. Ottone also had to face internal opposition led by one of the most brilliant Italian columnists—a master of the journalism—Indro Montanelli.

For years a kingmaker at the Corriere, Indro Montanelli was incensed at not being consulted when Ottone was appointed. Some months ago he resigned and is now preparing to launch a new daily newspaper that will be called Il Giornale and is expected to appear in Milan in the autumn under his editorship. He has already persuaded e number of journalists of the Corriere to follow him in this new venture. Il Giornale has huge financial mesna at its disposal: where they come from is not clear. Indro Montanelli says the newspaper will be owned by a cooperative of journalists like Le Monde, but this is inconsistent with the high salaries that are being paid to those won over from the

A CLEAR CLEAN SEA THE VERY BEST YOU CAN GIVE THEM FOR THEIR HOLIDAY

We cannot claim credit for the warm sun which colours those long Riviera days; nor for those wide unending beaches of golden sands along our coastline. But for the sea...! For the sea we have spent 53 thousand million Lire on anti-pollution plants: we have built specially equipped parks in our famous pinewoods which run parallel to the beach: we have kept our prices conveniently low. our folklore traditional, our food genuine. and our people's hospitality, as always, warm and friendly. But every-one knows that you don't come to the Riviera just for the sea, the sun and the sand. There are so many other things to discover a few minutes' distance from the beach. For example, the Roman Arch at Rimini, the mediaeval castles tucked away in the green hills, the rich mosaic Byzantine basilicas, Theodor's mausoleum at Ravenna; not to mention the Abbey of Pomposa, the museums and the local handicrafts, whose trade secrets have been passed down from generation to generation. In fact wherever you turn the wealth of a nation's history and art is never too far away. There are so many reasons for spending your holidays on our Riviera coast: the only difficulty is in the choosing. But you can always be sure of a different holiday, a complete holiday, and one well spent.

From Mr Geoffrey Goodman Sir, The claim (in Saturday's Times) that you have "not been unduly censorious about the recent cases of standal or pseudo-standal that have arisen in political life" is, I am afraid, belied by the very editorial in which the assertion was made.

I can imagine few more censorious and intellectually flatulent editorials on the subject of corruption than one which suggests—as yours did—that corruption and socialism are natural bediellows. Presumably your in-tended inference was that capitalism produces the opposite effect; that it raises and sustains moral standards; that it reduces the impulse for one individual to corrupt snother for personal and private gain; that capitalism, although based on the excitement of the individual competitive instinct, is somehow above the demoralizing processes which you ascribe to socialism. I do not need to pursue this line or argument to illustrate the absurdity and indeed the intellectual dishonesty of your proposition.

Before the First World War the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Lloyd George, and the Attorney General, n wonder that the nurses cities are part of the general metropolitan labour shortage.

The problem is often less one of recruitment than of getting the recruits to stay. Partly this is because a secretary these days can earn more than a nurse without the mess or the responsibility. It is also because of overstarchy hospital discipline, which is changing, but not as rapidly as young women's attitudes. In addition, there is the problem of forming an appropriate career structure in a profession largely filled by women, many of whom leave after a few years to get The Salmon committee's reforms, introduced in 1968, were intended to meet this difficulty, but these created a system whereby a nurse could only gain higher rewards by turning from nursing to administration. It created the impression that nursing itself was regarded as having a lower status. Last week's special a lower status. Last week's special awards to nurses who have teaching responsibilities (about one in three) were an attempt to redress this source of discontent, but in the circumstances they did not get the welcome they deserved. In London, and to a lesser extent elsewhere, hospitals short of staff have been hiring nurses from private agencies. Nurses who feel underpaid and hemmed in by old-fashioned rules are naturally exasperated to find themselves working heside others who may be earning almost twice as much, and can come and go much more freely. There have been moves to have them banned partially or completely, but they do often play a useful role. The hospital service has still not altogether solved the problem of fitting in fermer nurses who want to come hack on a part-time basis, and many agency nurses are in this position. in much the same plight. Outside the hospital service there are many other badly paid groups seeking recognition as special cases. Not many of them can command a similar measure of popular sympathy. Mr Foot's refusal last week to make any general concession even to the nurses at this stage, and the indecisive meeting with Mrs Castle yesterday, show how con-cerned the Government are to make full use of Phase Three for as long as that weapon remains in their hands. The claims that Mr Foot has allowed are rigorously chosen; special cases within categories that can claim to he special cases all through—some nurses, some teachers, and half a promise to some Post Office workers, whose leader, Mr Jack-son, warned yesterday that unless broposition.

Of course it would be possible to argue, with rather stronger evidence, that the reverse of your case is true. But the truth is that no political system and no political philosophy can housesly claim a monopoly of moral rectitude. Morality does not have a set of absolute and unchanging conditions. I would simply suggest that the evidence of history—including much of contemporary affairs—seems to indicate that it is where the pursuit of individual wealth and competition is at its height, often regardless of its effect on the communal interest, that corruption is at its greatest. recruitment was encouraged the whole service might collapse. Mr Jackson knows very well the cost of a strike to e union with insufficient hargaining power to gain its point, during e wages free-for-all. If Phase Three is wound up this summer, as the Government expect, there is not very much time left to settle with the TUC what machinery of voluntary restraint is to be put in its place. The statutory system, failing to take due account of relativities until too late, brought little enough satisfaction to the nurses, whose pay revaluation claim of January 1972 was caught up in successive Phases and still awaits negotiation. The voluntary system may provide far less protection : Mr Wilson warns us that it will not he "copper-bottomed" and that some unions may break it. They will be the ones that are strong enough. But whatever criteria the proposed standing royal commission on incomes applies, its success will be judged partly on its capacity to improve the actual relative position of lowpaid workers as against those who are able to look after themselves. Statutory or voluntary an incomes policy must include acceptable procedures for changing the relative pay of different groups.

From Lord Coleraine
Sir, In your compulsive discussion paper on inflation (May 1) and your leading article 10 days later "The Causes of Corruption", you say that the maintenance of the value of her currency is Britain's overriding objective to which all else, even full employment, must be sobordinated, and that there can be no solution to any of our problems, political, social, moral or economic, unless first of all we master inflation. Without this, all we master inflation. Without this, there can only be falling standards of life, industrial relations under in-creasing strain, and ultimately a fatal erosion of those rules of condoct which have so far shored up the frail fabric of Western civilization.

Now everyone, except for the politicians, is beginning to understand least of which is the creeping unwillingness of bureaucracies to accept responsibility, either collectively or by individual bureaucrats. If mistakes are made, smokescreens are easily raised to cloud issues, but if the mistakes continue to be obvious, then scapegoats are available.

The emire system, therefore, like large monopolies, encourages lack of

Reforming the bail system

From Chief Judge David H. Jacobs Sir, In two articles which appeared Sir, In two articles which appeared in The Times (May 3), one by Marcel Berlins, Legal Correspondent (at page 4), and an editorial (paga 19) entitled, "Reforming the Bail System", the working party recommended a new offence—absconding while on bail—should be incorporated into the British peral system. "It [the working party] believes that the present system of recognizances is not affective in ensuring that the defendant attends court when required, because be has little when required, because be has little to lose if be fails to turn up. It [the working party] feels that a defendant would think again about jumping bail if he knew that, when apprehended, he would be liable to a sentence of imprisonment, and not merely suffar tha loss of a small sum

I may venture to say that perhaps the working party might learn something of the prerial procedural devices now used in the Connecticut Circuit Court system. The state is geographically divided into 18 circuits, each circuit staffed with one or more so-called "bail commissioners". Tha bail commissioners ". Tha bail commissioners ". Tha bail commissioners the judges and therefore responsible to the Judges for the faithful discharge of their duties, conduct interviews with criminal defendants to determine the defenconduct interviews with criminal defendants to determine the defendant's roots in the community, his background, criminal record (if any), employment record, etc. A systematic development of the underlying facts is made to determine whether an accused may be released without bail. I should add that in Connecticut only 21 per cent of those released before trial failed to appear; consequently, I believe nur system is working out extremely well. Respectfully submitted, DAVID H. JACOBS, Chief Judge, Connecticut Circuit Court, 127 Lambert Avenue, Meriden, Conn, USA, 06450.

The firm through which we were supplied with the double-walled cup the only makers—recently decided to discontinue manufacturing because of the high cost of replacing life-expired machinery. This de-

Medicine: Muscular dystrophy debate

The controversy over the causes of muscular dystrophy continues. In a recent Science Report, experiments were described that suggested strongly than in mice, et least, the disease is based in the nerves and not in the muscles as previously thought. Now there is new evidence that supports the original theory that in humans the most severe form of the disease, Duchenne muscular dystrophy, is in fact caused by a defect in the muscles. muscles.

Many people dispute whether the

Many people dispute whether the disease in mice, on which most studies are based, is really identical with the Duchenne dystrophy in humans. So the only way to resolve the question was to work with the human disease. Dr Thomson, Dr Sweetin and Dr Eiton, of the Knightswood Hospital and medical virology unit in Glasgow, examined patients suffering from Duchenne muscular dystrophy. The disease is caused by a gene located on the X chromosome. As men have only one X chromosome and no counteracting gene on the accompanying Y chromosome, they are affected much more often than women, who mass have the defective gene on both their X chromosomes before the disease shows itself.

Men with this disease usually die of creatine kinuse in muscle, which leaks ont litto the blood as the muscle degenerates. The levels of the enzyme are very high in the blood of young patients, but as less and less muscle is left to be destroyed, the levels of the enzyme hecome lower, until between the ages of 25 and 30 they are normal. Dr Thomson and his colleagues also measured the amounts of creatine kinase in the blood of the mothers and sisters of hoys with muscular dystrophy.

All the women they chose had

All the women they chose had one X chromosome with the gene for muscular dystrophy and one normal X chromosome. These "carriers" of the disease appeared healthy and had a normal lifespan.

To each set of female chromosomes, one of the two X chromosomes is inactivated randomly very early in life. Since each nerve cell contains one set of chromosomes and each muscle fibre contains screen, the effect of X Inactivation is different in the two tieres. In Is different in the two tissues. Dr Thomson and his colleagues were thus able to deduce what they should expect to see in carriers if the disease were based in nerve or muscle.

If the disease originated in muscles would be normal. Crea-tine kinase levels in the blood would be high at first, but normal by the age of about 30, when all the affected muscle had degener-

But if the disease originated in muscle, only a few would contain no normal. X chromosomes since each muscle contains several sets of chromosomes. So the amount of creatine kinase in the blood would be slightly above normal. Fibres containing some muscular dystrophy genes and some normal cenes would probably be intermediate in stability between normal and dystrophic fibres, so degenera-and dystrophic fibres, so degeneration of those three would continue after the age of 30.

That is exactly what Dr Thomson and his colleagues found. The amount of creatine kinase in the blood of the female "carriers" was slightly higher than normal and continued to decrease slowly throughout their life, with no levelling off at the age of 30.

So it seems that the search for a common cause of all the different forms of muscular dystrophy has not been satisfied yet, and that doctors are coming round in the idea that muscular dystrophy is really a symptom with different underlying causes.

Farmers, wholesalers and butchers joined yesterday in calling for a subsidy to hold up the price paid to farmers for beef cartle. They estimated that this would cost £10m a year at present market prices, but could rise to an annual rate of £50m sater in the year.

Sir Henry Plumb, president of the National Farmers Union, said farmers could not endure a slide in livestock prices. They needed a guaranteed £19.25 a live hundredweight instead of the present level of less than £19. This could fall well below management Sweeping changes were made today at the Franklin New York Corporation and at its subsidiary, the Franklin Netional Bank, which is the 20th largest in the United States, as rumours multiplied about serious financial problems at the bank. The company had earlier requested the Securities and Exchange Commission to halt trading in its sbares.

Farmers and New York bank chiefs replaced in US Treasury official shake-up after fears of $25m loss

The corporation announced that it faced pessible losses in its foreign exchange business of up to $25m (£10.1m) for the period since March 31 this year. But it was broader financial problems that have evidently led to the replacement of Mr Paul Luftig, president of both the parent company and the bank.

Mr Barold Glesson, chairman of the perent concern and the bank, said be would take on the presidency of both companies on a temporary basis. He also amounced that Mr Peter Shad-dick hed resigned as both exe-curive vice-chairman and director of the organization.

According to one report, Mr Shaddick said he was resigning because the foreign exchange losses occurred in his department and he accepted responsi-bility, even though the losses had been concealed from him by a subordinate.

Mr George Mitchell, vice-chairman of the Federal Re-serve Board, yesterday stated: "The bank may experience some unusual liquidity pres-sures in the period ahead."

Rumours have abounded for some time about management difficulties at the bank, but no doubt was left io anyone's mind about the seriousness of the situation when, for the first time, the bank disclosed that no dividend would be paid for the first quarter either on its holding company's common or preferred stock.
This revelation saw the com-

The bank's directors amounted this moving that because of a foreign exchange trader operating beyond his authority "losses on foreign currency business since March 31 could total $25m".

But these losses are quite clearly only a part of Franklin's problems. The bank's first-quarter earnings slomped by 83 per ceut to $582,000. It also has capital problems and plans were amounced at the weekend to raise more cash by two consecutive rights issues totaling $50m. ing $50m.

dampens European hopes on gold issue 13.-Mr Jack Bennett, Under-

Secretary of the Treasury, said the Committee of 20 finance ministers' meeting in Washington next month would not be the place to resolve the gold price issue.

Mr Bennett, recently nomi-nated to take over as Treasury under-secretary for Moociary Affairs whan Mr Paul Volcker vacates the post next month, declared: "You cannot discuss such a major policy issue in such a big crowd." Mr Bennett said the United States remained opposed to eny change in the gold price or gold policy—moves which might place gold near the centre of a reformed inter-national monetary system when the majority of members of the Committee of 20 had agreed that its role should be diminished

This remained the case after the talks last week between Mr Volcker and Mr Willem Duisen-berg, the Duich Finance Minis-ter. Mr Duisenberg, represent-gave the United States Treas ury official details of the minisagreement reached at Zeist, in Hollend, last month.

That agreement reportedly covered an understanding that central banks should be allowed to buy gold as well as sell it on the free market. It also resulted in an agreement that central banks should be able to settle debts among themselves at a market-related price.

Washington, May 13.—The Treasury today issued a vaguely worded statement on what was called "exploratory discussions" between Mr Duisenberg and Mr William Simon, the Treasury Secretary on the future role of gold in international monetary arrangements.

Basle, May 13.—Central ban-kers today discussed the recent poor performance of the dollar against European currencies-principally the mark and the Swiss franc-but apparently took no action to stem the dollar's fall, informed sources said. No communiqué is expected.-

metricated Production by the engineering industries of metric or metric compatible items has reached an average of 44 per cent in value terms, Lord Orr-Ewing, chair-man of the Metrication Board, reported yesterday.

While this was a substantial achievement, there were also some signs of slackening of momentum, be said. "It is important to restore momentum so that the metric changes can be completed effectively and efficiently. Delay and a pro-longed use of two systems of measurement can be costly", be

Lord Orr-Ewing was commenting on the results of a recent board survey of metric changa involving over 600 com-panies in the engineering

The survey shows that, in value terms, 60-70 per cent production in metric (or metric compatible) is expected to be achieved by the end of 1975.

Some sectors will exceed this.

The survey revealed no general obstacles to the change but some difficulties—mainly in obtaining metric supplies in small quantities—have arisen because sectors are changing at different rates. Sometimes the progress of companies within the same sector has varied.

It claimed that when underwater gas pipes were being laid in the 1960s they were supplied primarily by Italy and other conotries, because the British steel industry could not supply pipes of the right specification. With hundreds of miles of undersea pipelines being laid in the North Sea, the ISTC said, most of the orders for pipes, valued at about £1,200m have been placed with Japanese sup-pliers. The BSC declined 10 tender since it considered that profits from the production of large diameter pipes were too low.

From Dr Frank A. Heller, Pro-fessor Malcolm Warner and Dr Peter Abell

The three signatures to this

Sir, Alternative schema for worker participation ara likely to be invented at an increasing rate during the next year or so, and your columns will undoubtedly make an important contribution to this debate. Pro-fessor Schmitthoff's "Tailoring the system to British needs" (May 6) differs little from other compromise solutions that have recently been canvassed, except in its pretension to relate the German, Dutch and Swedish participative schemes to a bespoke British solution. The arbitrary selection of evidence mixed with strong personal views makes such statements fairly useless. Last night a BSC spokesman said that if the strika was called off there would be a full In principle we believe that a comparative study of the various existing European participatory methods, including British exrecall of all workers "within a Tha craftsmen bava de-manded a £6.50 a week pay increase following their rejec-tion of a £3.50 offer which BSC maintained was the maximum perience, is an almost essential preliminary step for the design of an adequate way of structurallowed under the present pay legislation.

It is one of the first that has the courage to make definite proposals, but of course that makes it a better target for tions action. This is unlikely to come from contemporary Continental legislation which too often forces the personnel director into an adversary position with employees and Works Councils. However, it is no more likely to be created by the position somewhere between exalted shop steward and welfare officer described by Professor Schmitthoff. In particular the proposal con-cerning the role and status of persoonel director should ba challenged. Those with experience of this know the tension of at one moment representing the company's profitability to employees and their representa-tives, and at the next of repre-senting the employees' needs and intarests to fellow managers. Professor Schmitthoff's proposal exaggerates this requirement to wear two often contradictory, uncomfortable hats. Added to

Credit cards From Mr C. R. Gould

Sir, Ian Morison's otherwise excellent article on the role of credit cards in travel finance (Special Report, May 3) contains one important mistake

He states that it was Barclay-card which made a major breakthrough when the Association of British Travel Agents agreed to accept the card for payment for package bolidays. He thus implies that Access is not accepted by ABTA.

In fact, the negotiations with ABTA were carried out jointly by Access and Barclaycard, and the agreement applies equally to both cards. I am sure that you will wish to

Managing the economy the Wincott v

Sir, Peter Jay is to be congratulated on winning the Wincott Award for 1973 and I do so most warmly. I trust be will not take warmly. I trust be will not take it amiss if I ramind him that Harold Wincott was a journalist of high distinction whose beliefs about the causes and cure of Britain's economic ills were vary different from Mr Jay's own, and if I say bow deeply I regret that sinca Harold Wincott died in 1969 no other journalist, not even a winner of the Wincott Award, has been seen to carry on the evolution of that great man's ideas on what is great man's ideas on what is wrong with the way the British economy is run.

Harold Wincott believed, as I believe, that our economic troubles could be cured by restoring sound management to our public finances. That, for Harold Wincott, meant an end to budget deficits and makebelieve borrowing. It meant that taxation in all its forms abould cover, but no more than cover only the current expenditures of central govarnment and local authorities; and that all expenditure on capital account by public anthorities should be financed, not from the Exchequer out of current taxation, but by net sales of longterm government securities.

It seems that no one in Whitehall or Fleet Street has per-ceived in the official Financial Statistics that budget deficits in the post-war years have in fact resulted in a huge and growing accumulation of personal sav-ings of which the owners have chosen to bold a very large and increasing proportion in liquid forms. At the end of 1973 the individual people of this country disposed in aggregate of over £43,000,000,000 of such liquid funds, equivalent to some 85 per cent of the nation's total personal disposable income in the whole of the year 1973. It is therefore urgently necessary not only to restore sound management to our public finances but also to bring about effective deflation of the swollen liquidity in the personal sector of the economy.

Of the £43,000m of personal liquidity at the end of 1973 the owners chose to place £10,000m in National Savings, to bold £16,000m in current and desposit accounts with banks, and to deposit a further £16,000m with building societies. But this disposition in aggregate was the fortuitous outcome of individual decisions by many millions of people and pe people, and people can and do change their minds if persuaded that it is to their advantage to do so. That is wby the banks and building societies on avery High Street are seen to be competing for deposits by bidding up the rates of interes The result of this has been that cost of repayable credit began to rise above 6 per cent in 1964 ie now above 13 per cent, while the average dividend yield of industrial equities has remained below 6 per cent throughout the post-war years. In this situation individuals with money to invest prefer the high rates of interest to be gained from deposits with banks or building societies, while industrial companies are unable to raise equity capital on the market to finance expansion, as they normally did before 1939, and are forced to resort to costly repayable credit, which severally repayable credit, which severely rastricts expansionary cuter-

Harold Wincott argued that a government could restora sound management to our public finances by putting an end to budget deficits and make-believe borrowing, and that this could be done if all the capital requirements of the public sector were ments of the public sector were

Avoiding any predictions

The good news from GKN at this stago is that it has come through the first quarter in relatively good shape, with further improvement overseas apparently more than making good a marginal shortfall in the United Kingdom But where the group goes from here is another matter. Given the bope that the rale from the bome companies will be one of progressive improvement as the year unfolds, the reticence on the prospect of the full year outcome heating the 1973 performance looks slightly strange.

The answer, perhaps, is that though GKN can see a good summer ahead it is not particularly keen—and for good rea-son—to commit itself to predict-ing the likely course of events this autumn. The tenor of the report is that price restraint is difficult enough to cope with as it is and the clear implication of that is that should even the ing nine months.

But since the beginning of this year things have turned sour, with huge stocks of unsold cars piling up as a delayed recession brings the French car market into line with In 1955 Citroen entered into a cooperation agreement with Panhard. But it was only after a delayed recession brings the French car market into line with the rest of Europe.

This is the background to a growing feeling in France today that Citroen's present troubles may lead to whet one senior French motor indostry executive described last week as "the final solution".

One of the first tasks of 10-year-long courtship that the two finally merged.

A much more important event took place in 1968 when Fist, the Italian motor giant controlled by the Agnelli family, bought a large interest in Citroen. This was a complicated deal involving the setting-up of a Swiss holding company, Pardevi, which held the major-ity of Citroen shares. Michelin pad 51 per cent of Pardevi and Fiat 49 per cent.

In theory it was an excellent match combining the marketing and production expertise of Fiat with Circoen's flair for advanced engineering. But within two years there was strife between the partners.

most important industry to ride out the present storm without sustaining permanent damage. And the damage most feared is the collapse of Citroen.

Few Frenchmen believe this will be allowed to happen. It is the rescue plan and the form it will take which is now heing debated at great length. The most widely advocated method and one favoured in the past by French governments is a confi-"They wanted to treat me like a banker," Signor Giovanni Agnelli is reported to have rold confidantes Last year the finel break came with Fiat selling Michelin the whole of its Pardevi holding. Citroen was back in the motor jungle again and quite alone.

So much for Citroen's associations of the past. But what of the immediate future and the possibility of a new loosely linked Renault, Peugeot and Citroen association? The first two groups are already involved in extensive cooperation, showing that it is possible for a stateowned concern like the Regie to find common ground with one of

The ultimate solution advo-cated by many in private and a few in public is a full stateowned company giving France a viable interpetional contender a viable internetional contender capeble of taking on the rest of Europe, including the formi-dable subsidiaries of the Ameri-can giants, General Motors, Ford and Chrysler.

The possibility of such an alliance is by no means new, indeed a suitable name, Auto-mebilise de Fennce was being mobiles de France, was heing bandied around by government officials at the very time that Renault and Peugeot were in secret talks.

It was suggested in Paris last week that if M Mitterrand wins the Presidential election next week he will face strong pres-sure from his Socialist and Communist supporters to do this, with the succass of the

assess the full impact of this delayed recession in the French market it is necessary to look at the wider European scene. Falling sales had hit other European countries at least three months earlier.

Why that should he so is far from clear, although French motorists faced fewer government restrictions during the petrol crisis. But the ner result was that, with exports reduced and their bome market still buoyant, French manufacturers turned their sights inwards and the home market assumed an importance far in excess of its normal standing.

To some extent it may also heve fulled French car makers into maintaining a higher level of production than their German, Italian and even British counterparts.

In Citroen's case it is reported to have led 10 unsold stocks of 50,000 big DS saloons. Compared with the same period last year, DS sales fell by 45 cent in the first quarter; smaller but still expensive GS fell by 35 per cent while the economical little deux chevenux and Ami models improved by 32 per cent.
This last figure spotlights the real problem. Citroen must sell 2 small cars to make the profit of one DS. It is far more dependent on sales of its large saloons than either Renault, Peugeot or Chrysler-Simca. Nevertheless these three also face losses with demand for small cars outstretching production facilities while stocks of larger cars continue to pile up. Unofficial sources estimated that three weeks ago total unsold stocks of cars in France were close to 200,000. This compares with a reported 350,000 in Germany in the same period. To some extent Renault has heen lucky. Its very successful Renault 5 was launched two years ago and when the petrol crisis broke was already estab-lished in the European market with a growing reputation as an economical car. Today it accounts for 9 per cent of all sales io France and is shooting uo the charts in Italy. Germany

For a variety of reasons the fare safety programmo for hotels and boarding houses is making only slow progress, but pressures on proprietors who have been lagging behind are now growing. There are going to be many larger hotels, especially in the coastal resorts, who face the problem tackled by the Clarendee Court and hy the Clarendoo Court and who will not have the advantago of backing from a substantial parent company. Often in older huildings alternative exits hove to be equipped with smoke courrol doors, fire resistant materials sometimes have to be substituted on panelling or doors, smoke detector systems and emergency lighting usually must be put in.

Constructional work on this scale can take time even without the building delays, including materials shortages, which have also slowed much fire safety work. It bas made it particularly difficult for hoteliers anxious to carry out work during their off-season because to have workmen in during the season and cutting out business would be tantamount to closing down for good.

Some fire officers are not bappy at the number of mao-agements applying for exten-sion of time to complete necessary alterations, but hrigades on the whole are relying on per-suasioo to get managements to carry out their full responsibili-

The alternative is to resort to the hig stick of the local authority taking action in court against a proprietor for contravening the Act. So the hotel managers, strug-

On the other hand, putting in fire safety improve-ments are unlikely to find their insurance premiums being written down significantly. This is ecause, according to the British Insurance Association, pre-miums for the industry are already particularly low.

In fact, the only practical encouragement to hotel managements to improve their establishments is the option of local authority loans, albeit at the going commorcial rates. Those small, stormy tracts of the North Sea that lie above the oil and gas deposits have in the past few years collected some pretty odd names. Having found oil in the unromantically designated Block 2/5, Union Oil of California is the latest company the court off or the court. parry to set off on the search for a name.

At one time, the choice would have been haphazardly based either on an exploration executive's whim or, if he were a prosaic man, upon the field's geographical location. Today, however, the North See is firmly in the investor's eye, and the owners of the tracts are beginning to latch on to the value of catchy, easy to remem-ber names. Favourites at the moment are those with Scottish Argyll, Lomond and Montrose fields.

Union Oil's small London office is currently racking its brains to improve upon Block 2/5. The company, little-known in Britain, is the operator for a consortium that found this commercial field, east of the Shethands and close to BP/Burmah's Ninian field, named after the patron saint of the Shetlands.

British Petroleum was spared too much head-scratching with its Forties field, named after the stretch of sea in which the deposits were found. It was merely following the precedent set in the well-charted and shallower southern reaches of the North Sea, where eas finds like Leman and Indefarigable were named after the oceanological names for those stretches of seabod.

But the deeper water that lies but the deeper water that hes to the north is less well-charted and names for shoals and depths ara few. Shell, the operator for the Shell/Esso group, set the pattern here by maning its finds after seahirds. This came about because George Williams. a former general manager of Shell Exploration and Production, is a keen birdwatcher. It is to him that Shell owe Auk, Brent, Cormorant and Dunlin.

🔆 Pilferage of parcels leaving Wakefield Railway Station has cost the Company at least £40,000 and the total may be much greater. This, together with delays caused by the railway's dispute, and GPO restrictions on parcels to South East England, has caused some loss of goodwill.

Due to the forethought which had provided standby generators, the Company continued to work a five day week during the miners' strike, but we were frustreted by the shortage of goods reaching the warehouse. 🔆 The outlook is problematical with Government demand for a margin cut of 10%, extra N.I. contributions, increased texation end ever rising costs. Expansion both at home and ahroad is the keynote of the annual report of Sir Marcus Sieff, the chairman of Marks & Spencer. At home after complet-Spencer. At home after completing five new stores and 20 major extensions in 1973 the group is this year replacing small stores in Ayr, Macclesfield and Yeovil by huilding large ones. It is opening its first store at Sutton Coldfield and a further 15 stores will be rebuilt and extended during the year.

Exports of the group increased last year by 31 per cent to £13.6m, mostly in the second half, and priority is being given to developing exports in three fields. First the group is concentrating on developing business with customers who already hey substantial quantities of the group's goods; secondly to develop the 12 St Michael Shops in Canada and thirdly in the spring of 1975 the group will open stores in Paris, Brussels and later in Lyons.

F Sumner 42pc ahead

The forecast of a substantial increase in 1973 profits at Francis Sumner (Holdings), that textile and engineering group, has been met with a rise of 42 per cent, taking the pre-tax figure to £833,000. With more than four months of the current year gone the group is expecting further improvement in 1974.

The second half registered a main of only 10 per cent from 1373,000 to £410,000 but turnover for the full year progressed by 29 per cent from 17.9m to a record £10.2m. In the current year order books are at peak

At attributable level, however, profits are a shade off at £935,000 (£938,000). The dividend goes ahead from 0.95p to 0.99p, out of earnings a share of 2p, against 2.23p.

The results are thought satisfactory in a difficult year, which included the three-day week. Higher, interest rates were a burden, and while most subsidiaries performed well, setbacks were suffered at Tricosa, and Filigree Textiles. The international market for Tricosa's products has been difficult, and the company has also home the cost of transferring its knitting inperations to a mill unit at Saumur, France. The board is strengthening the sales and strengthening the sales and marketing division of Tricosa and is confident of the outcoma for this subsidiary.

Hudson's Bay Company INCORPORATED 2ND MAY 1670

Extracts from the Directors' Report

The Annual General Meeting of Hudson's Bay Company will be held in Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada, nn May 24. The following are extracts from the Directors' report for the financial year ended January 31, 1974.

Nineteen seventy-three was a notable year. Progress was made in expanding and rationalizing interests in real estate and natural resources. Sales and profits of merchandising operations continued to grow during a year of rapidly increasing costs. Earnings from all sources amounted to $1,29 per share, up from $1.16 a year ago. Three significant transactions involving nonmerchandising juterests took place in 1973.

The Company in June 1973 acquired a substantial minority interest in Siebens Oil & Gas Ltd., a Canadian petroleum exploration company with extensive land holdings in Western Caoada, the Arctic and the North Sea.

In July 1973 the Company issued $100,000.000 6% debenures exchangeable for approximately one half of our shoreholding to Hudsoo's Bay Oil and Gas Company Limited. Although the investment in FIBOG has been highly successful, your Directors considered it undesirable in the long term to have such a large proportion of the Company's assets in a single investment.

The Company in December 1973 acquired a 64.1°, interest in Markhorough Properties Limited, a Canadian property development company with important holdings of undeveloped land and income properties.

Earnings. Net earnings were $17,654,000 as against $13,654,000 in the previous year. Earnings of Markborough amounting to $237,000 have been consolidated from Decembar 1973. Equity accounting has been adopted for the Siebens investment and 35% of Siebens earnings from Jone 1973 has been included in profits.

Sales. Sales increased by 19.7% to 5804,334,000.

Dividends. A semi-annual dividend of 30c per share has been declared, an increase of 3c per share.

Retail Stores. The opening of five major department stores, three smaller department stores, 31 catalogue stores, and improved sales at existing units contributed to an 18.9% increase in retail sales. In spite of higher costs, retail earnings show improvement.

Wholesale. A strong consumer demand across the country and acquisitions on Vancouver Island and in Montreal were the principal reasons for a 21.4% increase in Wholesale volume. Wholesale profits were ahead by

Fur. The spectacular climb in demand and price of fur culminated in record prices for many varieties in December 1973. Each of the Company's auction houses succeeded in attracting increased offerings. No major declines are anticipated in the short term at least.

Natural Resources. Earnings of Hudson's Bay Oil and Cos Company Limited (21.2%, owned) were up 42% to $39,370,000 ($2.07 per common share). When the debentures referred to above are fully exchanged, our ownership of HBOG will be reduced to approximately 10%.

Earnings of Siebens Oil & Gas Ltd. (35% owned) were $3,244,000 (36c per share) for the 14 months ended October 31, 1973. This compares with earnings of 11c a share for the previous 12-month period.

Real Estate. Real estate interests consist primarily of whole or partial numership of a number of shopping centres in major Canadian cities. With the acousition of a 64.1% interest in Markborough Properties Limited in December, your Company's property operations have taken on a new and greater significance. Earnings of Markborough were 95,065,000 ($1.53 per share) for the year ended October 31, 1973, compared

Mr Edgar Bowring, chairman says, however, that the uptrend in the insurance underwriting, engineering, trading and ship-ping subsidiaries should cominue in 1974. Insurance broking activities (44 per cent of 1973 profits) should show greater improvement.

Sir Humphrey Browne, Chairman of Bestebell, says in his Annual Statement:-

"With 8 months results available for overseas a substantial improvement on last year is expected.

The U.K. contribution is less predictable but so far order intake has been at a high level and satisfactory results have been achieved.

From the nature of its business and Its worldwide spread Bestoball will not suffer from the adverse influences in this country to the same extent as may other concerns."

The dollar still under pressure

The Deutsche mark continued to lead major European currencies in a broad advance against the dollar yesterday.

Mounting concern about the current United States political dituation, allied to speculation of an impending mark revaluation within the European currency float provided the maio impetus for currencies. London dealers reported.

The mark closed at 2.3940-60 against the United States dullar for a two-pfennig advance from its 2.4140-60 closing rate Friday. However, in hectic trading earlier. 2.4140-60 closing rate rritary. However, in hectic trading earlier, the German currency at one point had touched 2.3900, recording an effective upvaluation of nearly 11.75 per cent based on its 2.6904 dollar central rate set last June. However, sterling closed weaker in most centres, although ending steady against the dollar at $2.4290, down just 10 points. The pound's exchange rate dropped to 5.8150 against the mark from 5.8800 Friday, with the Bank of England's trade-weighted sterling depreciation rate against 10 major currencies widening sharply over the ession to 18.02 per cent at the close from 17.70 at mid-session. Elsewhere, the Canadian dollar closed at 103.92-95 (104.01-04 on Friday) against the United States currency, casier than its midsession rate of 104.00-04.

The French franc closed firmer at 4.7850-7900 (4.8350-8450), aided by renewed opinion poll predictions

discount houses

The London discount market had a rather uneventful session yesterday. Money was a touch short nearly but there was no intervention by the authorities and it is possible that bankers' balances finished a little below target levels. The main talking point was the failure of any other major bank to fullow the lead of Lloyds in reducing its base rate.

The rate for day-to-day money fluctuated narrowly throughout the day between 111-111 per cent, with the rate more bid than offered. Some houses reported quite a large turnover but generally the market was fairly quiet. Factors operating against the market included run down balances brought furward a net treasury bill take-up, maturing commercial and local authority bills in the hands of the sutherities and large gilt-edged settlements reflecting official sales of gilts on Friday.

On the other hand. Government disbursements exceeded revenue paymeots, there was an inflow of notes, an outflow of money to the building societies, and the monthly adjustment in special deposits which was also in the markets fevour.

Coffee futures drop £17.50

Heavy losses were recorded in London. Robusta coffee futures yesterday on reports that Colombia had heen adopting an eggressive sales policy recently which would make k possible for their exports to exceed those of last year. This was causing concern in other Latin American mild coffee producing countries who are currently trying to coordinate sales policies and, if the need arises, withhold coffee from the world market in order to maintain high prices.

These reports saw terminal prices marked down between £15 and £17.50 a long ton by the close in spite of meeting improved scale down buying and short covering resistance in late dealings.
